Caste discrimination

There are an estimated 260 million Dalits worldwide, often born into an ‘untouchable’ status in highly stratified caste systems. Caste systems are found in South Asia, in communities migrated from South Asia across the globe and in other caste-stratified countries in Africa and Asia.

Caste-based discrimination involves massive violations of civil, political, economic, social and cultural rights. Caste systems divide people into unequal and hierarchical social groups. Those at the bottom are considered ‘lesser human beings’, ‘impure’ and ‘polluting’ to other caste groups. Those in the lowest of castes, known as Dalits in South Asia, are often considered ‘untouchable’ and subjected to so-called ‘untouchability practices’ in both public and private spheres. Dalits may be forced to do the most dirty and hazardous jobs, and subjected to modern slavery. Due to exclusion practiced by both state and non-state actors, Dalits have limited access to resources, services and development, keeping many in severe poverty.

Dalits are often de facto excluded from decision-making and meaningful participation in public and civil life.

Lack of special legislation banning caste-based discrimination or lack of implementation of legislation, due to dysfunctional systems of justice, lack of state responsibility and caste-bias, have largely left Dalits without protection.

Despite policy development and new legislation in some countries, fundamental challenges still remain in all caste-affected countries.

Executive Summary

In 2015, the key themes of IDSN’s work have been atrocities and access to criminal justice, the rights struggle of Dalit women, forced and bonded labour, and caste discrimination in the delivery of humanitarian assistance.

Global media outlets reported on caste discrimination responding to themes and input from IDSN including LA Times, Huffington Post, the Guardian, Reuters and Mashable. Humanitarian portals such as ReliefWeb reported on caste discrimination in relief taking up IDSN urgent appeals released after the earthquake in Nepal. The appeals were communicated to hundreds of stakeholders and key members of the media.

Visibility in the United Nations also increased. UN High level officials made a number of significant statements on caste discrimination as well as caste references in reports, noting caste discrimination on par with other prohibited grounds of discrimination.

However, the issue of caste continued to be under rug swept by states at important UN fora because powerful elements do not wish to address it at an international level. The Sustainable Development Goals (SDGs) 2030 were thus adopted without a reference to 260 million people impoverished and excluded due to caste discrimination. Many IDSN members had worked hard to secure recognition of caste-based inequality in the SDGs.

Also in 2015, IDSN presented a number of joint submissions to the UN human rights bodies and closely monitored UN referencing to caste issues.

UN Special Procedures discussed caste discrimination at a parallel meeting at the Annual Meeting of the mandate holders in June and seven thematic mandates made references to caste in their reports to the Human Rights Council in 2015.

Close cooperation with the Office of the High Commissioner for Human Rights (OHCHR) and UN Special Rapporteurs continued with regular information sharing and dialogues, and submission of thematic contributions by IDSN and its members.

Backed by the OHCHR, IDSN co-organised a side-event on ‘Caste- and gender-based forced and bonded labour’ at the 29th session of the Human Rights Council.

In statements at the Forum and at the 50th Anniversary of the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination (ICERD), Dalit leaders highlighted the dismal state of access to criminal justice for Dalits and again called for action by their governments and the international community.

The Universal Periodic Review of Nepal, which took place in November, provided a unique occasion for Dalit organisations to review the situation of Dalits in the country and with the support of IDSN to present findings and recommendations to UN member states and the Government.

IDSN shared information on UN developments and outcomes related to caste discrimination widely with decision makers, UN and EU agencies and affected groups. IDSN also continued to make specific recommendations to various institutional stakeholders and Governments, and promoted the endorsement and use of the draft UN Principles and Guidelines for the Effective Elimination of Discrimination based on Work and Descent noting the need also for cross cutting UN monitoring on progress.

During the year, IDSN made submissions and shared briefing notes and information on caste discrimination with EU officials and members of the European Parliament. In June, an IDSN delegation was invited for formal exchanges with the EU Human Rights Working Group (COHOM) and the European External Action Service, resulting in constructive dialogues on core issues and recommendations, including on caste-based discrimination as a serious impediment to ensuring equality in disaster relief and rehabilitation.

The European Parliament adopted several resolutions with clauses on caste discrimination and strong recommendations for speeding up EU action to fight this form of discrimination. Encouragingly, the EU have started mentioning ‘caste’ alongside other grounds of discrimination, and Action Plans for the European Instrument for Democracy and Human Rights (EIDHR) now integrate the rights of persons affected by caste-based discrimination as a cross-cutting concern.

In 2015, IDSN launched a new website, which offers discrimination based on Work and Descent noting the need also for cross cutting UN monitoring on progress.

Keynote speakers included the UN Special Rapporteur on contemporary forms of slavery, and ILO Senior Specialist, Coen Campen. Central to the debate was the need for multidimensional approaches to address the lack of implementation of legislation and policies in caste-affected countries.

Marking an important milestone in work to find new and effective ways to combat caste-based discrimination, the OHCHR organised a two day technical consultation on a draft UN Guidance tool on discrimination based on work and descent in October. IDSN supported participation of Dalit representatives at the consultation, and at Human Rights Council sessions, the Forum on Minority Issues and other UN events.

In 2015, IDSN launched a new website, which offers great new features such as a searchable cross-referenced documentation database and integration of IDSN’s social media channels. The IDSN website is a unique global resource on caste discrimination with a steadily increasing global resource on caste discrimination with a steadily increasing global resource on caste discrimination with a steadily increasing global resource on caste discrimination with a steadily increasing user engagement. IDSN web statistics for 2015 show that 160 universities and research institutions worldwide use the website. IDSN also registered a 95% increase in Twitter followers compared to 2014; and an increase in subscribers to our monthly email newsletters and social media channels.

While the programmatic outcomes overall have been commendable in 2015, IDSN faced financial constraints due to the unexpected withdrawal of a major funding commitment for 2015 and 2016. IDSN was able to reduce budgets and operations, and with the generous support of an existing funder ensure that sufficient funding sustained the organisation through the year.

I wish to acknowledge and give big thanks to everyone who collaborated, supported and contributed to IDSN’s work in 2015.

UN High-level officials made a number of significant statements on caste discrimination as well as caste references in reports in 2015. In June, IDSN co-organised a side-event on Caste- and gender-based forced and bonded labour at the 29th session of the Human Rights Council. Keynote speakers included the UN Special Rapporteur on contemporary forms of slavery, and ILO Senior Specialist, Coen Compier.

A technical consultation on a draft UN Guidance tool on discrimination based on work and descent organized by the OHCHR marked an important milestone in work to find new and effective ways to combat caste-based discrimination.

IDSN supported representation of Dalit human rights defenders at Human Rights Council sessions, the Forum on Minority Issues and other UN events. Dalit leaders highlighted core issues in statements at the Forum and the SDG Anniversary of the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination (ICERD).

Along with its members, IDSN presented a number of joint submissions to the UN human rights bodies in 2015 and continued a close monitoring of UN referencing to caste issues. The Universal Periodic Review of Nepal provided a unique occasion for Dalit organisations to review the situation of Dalits in the country and with the support of IDSN to present the findings and recommendations to UN member states and the Government.

Information on UN developments related to caste discrimination was shared widely with decision makers, UN and EU agencies and affected groups. IDSN furthermore continued to promote the draft UN Principles and Guidelines for the Effective Elimination of Discrimination based on Work and Descent, and the idea of a cross cutting UN monitoring mechanism.

Human Rights Council

Several thematic mandates, intergovernmental working groups and UN High Commissioner for Human Rights made references to caste discrimination in their reports to the UN Human Rights Council sessions in 2015. IDSN produced documents containing caste extracts from reports presented at the 28th, 29th and 30th sessions of the HRC, and disseminated the references and recommendations on caste-based discrimination to States for consideration in the

UN Special Rapporteur on Slavery

In her key note presentation at the IDSN side-event on Caste- and gender-based forced and bonded labour at the 29th session of the Human Rights Council, Urmila Bhoola, UN Special Rapporteur on contemporary forms of slavery noted:

“Successful fight against stigmatisation and deeply entrenched discrimination necessitates the involvement of all, which is only possible by means of broad awareness raising, increased social consciousness and denouncing of continued discrimination based on caste, gender and other factors that undermine human dignity and violate human rights. Events such as this one are an important part of it.”

Speakers from South Asia highlighted the intersection of caste and gender in forced prostitution, manual scavenging, work in construction and textile industries, and agricultural work. Doloi-Kanaan pointed out that, if the underlying stigmatisation and discrimination is not addressed, Dalits will continue to be forced into these inhumane labour conditions.

The event was co-sponsored by Human Rights Watch, the International Movement Against All Forms of Discrimination and Racism (IMADR), Minority Rights Group (MRG), Anti-Slavery International, and Franciscans International (FI).

IDSN produced a report from the side-event.

UPR Nepal

Seventeen United Nations member states raised their concerns and recommendations on caste discrimination at the United Nation’s Periodic Review of Nepal, urging the Government, in particular, to ensure effective implementation of the Caste-Based Discrimination and Untouchability Act of 2011. States also recommended engaging and addressing the needs of vulnerable communities, including Dalits, in earthquake relief and securing equal opportunities in education for the communities.

In advance of the review, held on 5 November, the Dalit Civil Society Organizations’ Coalition for UPR, Nepal and IDSN submitted a parallel report entitled ‘Human Rights Situation of the Dalit Community in Nepal’. A summary note with recommendations was shared widely with UN member states, and the core content discussed with diplomatic missions.

Nine recommendations made it into the final report.
UN Special Procedures

IDSN continued its close dialogue with UN Special Procedures mandate holders in 2015. Furthermore, input was given to mandate holders in 2015 for 2016 reports. Caste discrimination was discussed at the Annual Meeting of the UN Special Procedures mandate holders in June. Mandates on slavery, minorities, older persons, water and sanitation, arbitrary executions, the Working Group on people of African descent, and the Working Group on the issue of discrimination against women in law and in practice, made references to caste in their reports to the Human Rights Council in 2015. Navsaran Trust and IDSN submitted a joint alternative NGO report in August, as input to the HRC32 Report on health and safety of the UN Working Group on discrimination against women in law and practice16. The report focused on caste- and gender-based discrimination with regards to the right to health and safety, noting the many references on the topic made already by the Working Group. Special Rapporteurs, Treaty Bodies, UN agencies, and major NGOs. The barriers and human rights violations highlighted in the report, revolve around lack of access to health service, persistent practice of manual scavenging and violence committed against Dalit women with impunity.

“Minority women may face multiple stigmas in relation to their ethnic or religious background, their sex, and the nature of the crime of which they were the victim. In India, for instance, Dalit women subjected to violence reportedly face unnecessary delays and pressure to drop charges, which are linked to a combination of their gender and minority status”. Special Rapporteur on minority issues - Ms. Rita Sakwa-Nkaide - report A/HRC/30/35.

In her country report on Mauritius, the Special Rapporteur on older people notes that protected grounds of discrimination under the law include caste, ethnic origin and impairment14. She refers to concerns, previously raised by CERD (2013) including “the persistence of hierarchical structures in society, particularly relating to the caste system, which are a source of exclusion. Although law does not recognize the caste system, it is deeply rooted in Mauritian tradition.” The Special Rapporteur on extrajudicial, arbitrary executions, Mr. Christof Heyns presented a follow up report on his mission to India (A/HRC/29/37

UN Forum on Minority Issues

This year’s Forum on Minority Issues, held on 24 and 25 November, focused on “Minorities in the Criminal Justice System”19. UN Forum on Minority Issues - webpage” on page 38. Three countries on this topic made already by the Working Group, Special Rapporteur welcomed the introduction of the Scheduled Castes and the Scheduled Tribes (Prevention of Atrocities) Amendment Bill of 2014, and noted that effective implementation of this legislation remains essential.

Treaty Bodies

The total number of caste-affected countries examined by UN human rights bodies reached 21 in 2015. The total number of treaty body reviews, noting caste discrimination as a concern, according to regions are composed as follows: Africa (17); Middle East (9); Europe (2); The Americas (1); and Asia (45).

In its review of Suriname the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination notes, that although the caste system is not institutionalised in Suriname, the Committee is concerned about reports on the persistence of such a system in certain communities of Indian origin living in the state party20. The Committee, recalling its General Recommendation No. 19 on discrimination based on descent, recommends the State party to take steps to identify the specific communities and persons who may suffer from such practices and if applicable, to adopt specific measures to combat and eradicate such discriminatory practices21.

IDSN and the Pakistan Dalit Solidarity Network (PDSN) submitted a joint alternative report on Scheduled Caste Children in Pakistan for the Committee on the Rights of the Child (CRC). PSWG review of Pakistan and the CRC review of Pakistan in 201622. Key issues include lack of education and economic exploitation, and child labour.

IDSN also prepared a brief submission to the CRC review of Bangladesh23. In its concluding observations, the Committee reiterates its previous concern on discrimination against certain groups of children, particularly girls, and Dalit and indigenous children, who face discrimination and violence, and lack access to quality education24.

Though the Government accepted the recommendations related to caste, all of the 9 recommendations were categorized by the government as ‘already implemented or in the process of implementation’. This raises a critical question on future accountability and progress monitoring on state obligations to eliminate caste discrimination, and underlines the need for a national action plan.

Speaking on behalf of the Dalit delegation in Geneva, Bhakta Biswakarma, President of Nepal National Dalit Social Welfare Organisation (NNDWO), acknowledged the Government’s strides over the past years to ensure Dalit rights through legislative measures, and called for a national action plan to eliminate caste discrimination and effective coordinating mechanism to oversee its implementation. State led public campaigns and institutional reform to secure inclusion were also strongly recommended.

Highlighting the status of Dalit women in Nepal, Feminist Dalit Organisation (FEDO) with IDSN input prepared a briefing for the 59th session of the Commission on the Status of Women. The organizations also supported Dalit women participation in the session. FEDO (Nepal) report for CSW59 on Dalit Women. March 2015, reveals an appalling literacy rate for Dalit women at 34.8%, that 80% of Dalit women in Nepal live below the poverty line, and that access to higher education for Dalit women is 11.8% as compared to 54.5% of the total population of women in Nepal17.

IDSN continued to engage invaluable support from and cooperation with international associates, including for UN side-events and accreditation to UN events. IDSN co-sponsored a Joint Statement with Franciscans International in the HRC28 Interactive Dialogue with the Special Rapporteur on religion and belief and an Anti-Slavery and SR slavery side-event on the subject of the Special Rapporteur on slavery’s HRC30 report on contemporary forms of slavery in supply chains at HRC30 on 16 June. IDSN also co-sponsored Franciscans International’s handbook “Making Human Rights Work for People Living in Extreme Poverty”21.
UN General-Secretary

Millions of Dalits still face discrimination - we must continue battle for equality

UN High Level Officials and OHCHR

In October, the OHCHR organised a two-day technical consultation on a draft UN Guidance tool on discrimination based on work and descent. Participants included UN experts, UN agencies (including members of UN country teams), academics, representatives from affected communities and international NGOs. The preparation of guidance for the UN system on key challenges, priorities and strategic approaches to combat discrimination based on work and descent was envisaged in the Action Plan 2014 of the UN Network on racial discrimination and protection of minorities for the implementation of the Secretary-General's Guidance Note29. IDSN and members engaged in this landmark consultation and commended the OHCHR for its work and priority on caste discrimination. On several occasions during the year, OHCHR officials met with Dalit representatives and IDSN staff.

UN high-level officials30 made a number of significant statements on caste discrimination as well as references in reports. In his opening Statement to the 28th session of the Human Rights Council, the High Commissioner Mr. Zeid Ra’ad Al Hussein highlighted that the majority of victims of human rights abuses around the world share two characteristics: deprivation, and discrimination – based on, among others, caste.

The UN Secretary-General has spoken out on caste and Dalits on several occasions, including in his keynote speech at the Indian Council of World Affairs on 14 January.

ECOSOC

The now 8-year deferral of IDSN’s application continued due to questions in the NGO Committee posed by India. By 2015 IDSN has received 69 written questions. As pointed out by the UN Special Rapporteur on freedom of assembly and association in the General Assembly already in October 2014, the continued questioning and deferral are “clearly unacceptable, wrong and unfair”. IDSN’s application is now the longest pending with the Committee.

In March, in a joint open letter to the US Secretary of State, Mr. John Kerry, fifteen leading civil society organisations urged the US to take leadership in supporting IDSN’s application for UN consultative status31. The organisations called on the United States to “use its position as a member of the United Nations Committee on NGOs to support IDSN to obtain special consultative status with the UN and thus protect its right to express its views regarding the elimination of caste-based discrimination.”

In April, the International Service on Human Rights (ISHR) released a new handbook on NGO access to the UN and the UN Committee on NGOs: A Practical Guide to the UN Committee on NGOs32. The case of IDSN is featured several places in the handbook and as a case study in chapter 5.

The IDSN Executive Director spoke on panels at launches of the ISHR handbook hosted by the Permanent Mission of Australia to the UN in Geneva, and New York33.

“After seven years of waiting, IDSN deserves to receive a definitive response to its request for UN consultative status ... We call on the United States to take a leadership role in the ECOSOC Committee on NGOs to ensure this happens,” 34 Michelle Evans of the International Service for Human Rights said at the event.

IDSN Executive Director attended the two sessions of the NGO Committee held in 2015. At the June session, the Chair of the NGO committee urged members to reach a conclusion on the application35.

UN Secretary-General’s report

IDSN prepared a submission to the UN Secretary-General General Assembly 2015 Report on “Elimination of Racism” Recommendations in relation to the implementation of General Assembly resolution A/RES/69/162 of 18 December 201436. The submission includes recommendations to the UN General Assembly to promote and endorse specific measures to address caste discrimination and to include caste “in any review, framework and action plans on racial discrimination as well as in its follow-up to the Durban Declaration and Programme of Action and upon commemorating the fifteenth anniversary of the Durban Declaration and Programme of Action”. The IDSN contribution was featured in the summary of stakeholders information for the report37.

SDGs – No mention of 260 million affected by Caste discrimination

The Sustainable Development Goals (SDG) were adopted at the 70th session of the United Nations General Assembly in October 2015. The final document calls for a reduction of inequality under the slogan of “Leave No One Behind”. However, it fails to give any recognition to caste discrimination as a major structural factor underlying poverty, and as a root cause of inequalities. This despite continuous contributions to the SDG processes by Asia Dalit Rights Forum (ADRIF) and other rights groups on the topic. IDSN endorsed and promoted the ADRIF appeal for the inclusion of caste-affected communities and recognition of caste-based exclusion in the post-2015 SDGs, which also contains suggestions for inclusion of caste in the indicators38.

Accordingly, IDSN called for indicators to include disaggregated data on caste and targeted budgeting to end poverty, based on the Multiple Dimension Index (MDI) inclusive of age, sex, disability, race, caste, ethnicity, origin, religion, economic or other status and rural-urban divide.

UN Guidelines

Benchmarked the draft UN Principles and Guidelines39

Three comprehensive country studies were conducted under the Asia Dalit Rights Forum for Bangladesh40, Nepal41 and India42 in 2014. In the reports published online in 2015, Dalit NGOs set out country level status of implementation of measures outlined in the UN Principles and Guidelines for the Effective Elimination of Discrimination based on Work and Descent.

IDSN provided inputs through rights institutions for the inclusion of caste in the Reference Paper on SDG Data. Indicators and Mechanisms linked to the open consultation of the Inter Agency Expert Group providing recommendations on selected indicators for implementation and monitoring of the Sustainable Development Goals.

World Bank

IDSN provided input to the 1st and 2nd draft of World Bank Safeguard Policies (World Bank Environmental and Social Framework) issued in March and July. IDSN recommended that the World Bank supports the development and implementation of inclusive and appropriate policies, that enable the effective targeting of marginalised and excluded groups in World Bank projects, especially caste-affected groups. Among other recommendations the World Bank is encouraged to adhere to a common approach to addressing caste-based discrimination in projects and operations39.

50th Anniversary of ICERD

Statements by the International Movement Against all forms of Intolerance and Discrimination and Racism (IMADR) and IDSN brought related to caste-based discrimination to the fore as the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination celebrated the ICERD convention’s 50th anniversary on 26 November43.

Caste discrimination was given solid attention during the day, as the issue was highlighted by panel speakers and raised by states and civil-society from the floor during the interactive discussions. The two written NGO contributions available on the OHCHR web page for the event, both related to caste-based discrimination44.

IDSN urged the Committee to pursue the idea of regular joint review process on status and follow up on concluding observations and recommendations on caste discrimination by UN Treaty Bodies, Special Procedures and UPR. IDSN board member, Manjula Pradeep, presented the IDSN statement ‘50 years of ICERD – from paper tigers to global action at the anniversary event’45.
In 2015, the European Parliament adopted several resolutions with clauses on caste discrimination and strong recommendations for speeding up EU action to fight this form of discrimination. Encouragingly, the EU has started mentioning “caste” alongside other grounds of discrimination, and Action Plans for the European Instrument for Democracy and Human Rights (EIDHR) integrate the rights of persons affected by caste-based discrimination as a cross-cutting concern. IDSN was invited for formal exchanges with the EU Human Rights Working Group (COHOM) and the European External Action Service in June. Through the year, IDSN made submissions, shared briefing notes and new information on caste discrimination with EU officials and members of the European Parliament.

EU advocacy, dialogue and input

The year offered several excellent opportunities for dialogue and input to EU institutions and processes. Importantly, the EU revised its Human Rights and Democracy Action Plan54 to which IDSN submitted recommendations. Despite the relevance, caste discrimination was not among the thematic priorities of this human rights agenda, which commits EU institutions and member states to deliver on human rights as “the silver thread running through all EU policies and actions”. However, the development of an “EU Handbook on Anti-discrimination” with tools for anti-discrimination measures allows against all forms of discrimination, including multiple discrimination, may be among the practical means for the EU to focus explicitly on caste.

IDSN staff and members met with EU officials and MEPs in Brussels on several occasions and maintained regular communication. Many EU officials and MEPs receive IDSN’s newsletter and targeted information.

In April, letters were addressed to EU high-level officials, i.e. the High Representative for Foreign Relations, Federica Mogherini, Special Representative for Human Rights, Stavros Lambrinidis, and EEAS Director for Human Rights and Democracy Silvio Gonzato, reiterating IDSN’s call for an EU policy on the elimination of caste-based discrimination, and high level EU public diplomacy on the issue. IDSN also provided submissions and briefings related to caste, human rights and development in country situations, including a submission on Bangladesh to the Subcommittee on Human Rights (DROI) staff and an EP delegation, before their visit to the country. IDSN furthermore facilitated information and recommendations on caste related issues for the Universal Periodic Review of Nepal in November. Briefing papers shared with EU officials and MEPs include IDSN recommendations for relevant inter-active dialogues of the Human Rights Council sessions; IDSN submissions to UN human rights bodies, e.g. to the Commission on the Status of Women on the situation of Dalit women; and the report55 from the OHCHR backed IDSN side-event on Caste- and gender-based forced and bonded labour held at the 29th session of the Human Rights Council. IDSN also shared information on the Nepal earthquake disaster and caste discrimination in relief to MEPs and EU officials, including EU’s humanitarian arm ECHO, who took a considerable interest in the topic.

On 16 June, IDSN had exchanges56 with the EU Human Rights Working Group (COHOM) of the Council of the EU and the European External Action Service. IDSN board members and the Executive Director presented current thematic challenges and recommendations, urging the adoption of an EU policy on the prevention and elimination of caste-based discrimination, EU high-level public diplomacy on caste-based discrimination and support to initiatives at the multilateral level. EU officials noted issues related to the exclusion of caste in the process leading to the Sustainable Development Goals (SDGs), the Universal Period Review of Nepal and call for non-discrimination in relief and reconstruction in Nepal. Country situations were presented by Paul Divalak (HCIDHR, India), Manjula Pradeep (Woorvanjan Trust, India), Durga Sob (FEDO, Nepal) and Sandra Petersen (IDSN-Norway) on behalf of Pakistani Dalit Solidarity Network.

On several occasions, the IDSN Executive Director met EU officials and member state representatives in New York to discuss support of IDSN’s stalled application for ECOSOC accreditation57.

In September, the EU delegation in New York hosted a meeting for EU member states with civil society representatives and parliamentarians from South Asia. The meeting, prompted by the Asia Dalit Rights Forum (ADRF) in the context of the Sustainable Development Goals Summit, addressed concerns over leaving out Dalits and other caste-affected people from the world’s foremost considerations on reducing inequalities.

EIDHR - Increased focus on caste

Over the past years, the European Instrument for Democracy and Human Rights (EIDHR) funding of civil society action to eliminate caste discrimination has been considerable. It has paved the way for innovative projects and approaches, and included support to regional activities. The 2015 EIDHR Action Plan integrated the rights of persons affected by caste-based discrimination as a cross-cutting concern. It made specific mention of persons affected by caste discrimination in action documents on support to civil society; in its actions to support protection and promotion of human rights, human rights defenders, universities for human rights and democracy postgraduate education and in supporting key international actors, including the UN Office of the High Commissioner for Human Rights. In the course of the year, the European Instrument for Democracy and Human Rights released several global calls for proposals relevant for organisations working at the grassroots level for Dalit rights.

The commitment of the EU institutions to integrate caste-based discrimination and people affected by caste discrimination is noteworthy and reflected in the EIDHR Action documents for supporting human rights priorities and Global Calls 2016-2017. The documents address a number of key issues of caste-affected people and outlines a range of actions, that can be pursued under the priorities for EIDHR global calls.

European Parliament

Over the course of the year, several MEPs, including former Finnish Minister of Development Heidi Hautala, posed questions58 on caste discrimination to Commissioners and challenged follow up to the resolution of 10 October 2013 on caste discrimination inhibiting the aid efforts.

In June, a European Parliament urgency resolution59 on the situation in Nepal after the earthquake raised concern over caste discrimination hampering aid efforts in Nepal.

In 2015, the European Parliament adopted an Urgency Resolution raising concern over caste discrimination inhibiting the aid efforts.

On 17 December 2015, the European Parliament adopted resolution(2015/2229(INI)60 on the Annual Report on Human Rights and Democracy in the World 2014. The parliament took note of its resolution of 10 October 2013 on caste discrimination; and condemned in the strongest terms all forms of discrimination, including those based on caste. The Parliament urged the EU to intensify its efforts to eradicate all types of discrimination, through human rights and political dialogue, the work of the EU Delegations and public diplomacy. Specifically, the Parliament notes “with great concern the scale and consequences of caste-based discrimination and recommends the mainstreaming of the topic in the EU’s programmes”.

As a member of the Brussels-based Human Rights and Development Network (HRDN), IDSN supported the network’s campaign on Human Rights Defenders and call for stronger EU leadership on human rights. The HRDN Troika meet occasionally with COHOM, in a December briefing the Troika with a point of departure in the principle of the SDGs “– and noted IDSN’s call for “promotion of supportive initiatives at multilateral level and for mainstreaming of the issue as part of the EU’s pledge to fight all forms of discrimination”.

Encouragingly, EU made several statements at the UN, pointing to, inter alia, its concern of “repeated efforts by some to undermine the principle of universality with cultural relativism,” and noting that human rights protection is not afforded to groups, beliefs or ideologies but to human beings – whatever their race, ethnicity, age, gender, sexual orientation, religion, caste or migration status”. The European Parliament has started mentioning “caste” alongside other grounds of discrimination, and Action Plans for the European Instrument for Democracy and Human Rights (EIDHR) integrate the rights of persons affected by caste-based discrimination as a cross-cutting concern. It made specific mention of persons affected by caste discrimination in action documents on support to civil society; in its actions to support protection and promotion of human rights, human rights defenders, universities for human rights and democracy postgraduate education and in supporting key international actors, including the UN Office of the High Commissioner for Human Rights. Specifically, the Parliament notes “with great concern the scale and consequences of caste-based discrimination and recommends the mainstreaming of the topic in the EU’s programmes”.

As a member of the Brussels-based Human Rights and Development Network (HRDN), IDSN supported the network’s campaign on Human Rights Defenders and call for stronger EU leadership on human rights. The HRDN Troika meet occasionally with COHOM, in a December briefing the Troika with a point of departure in the principle of the SDGs “– and noted IDSN’s call for “promotion of supportive initiatives at multilateral level and for mainstreaming of the issue as part of the EU’s pledge to fight all forms of discrimination”.

Encouragingly, EU made several statements at the UN, pointing to, inter alia, its concern of “repeated efforts by some to undermine the principle of universality with cultural relativism,” and noting that human rights protection is not afforded to groups, beliefs or ideologies but to human beings – whatever their race, ethnicity, age, gender, sexual orientation, religion, caste or migration status”.

The many campaigns in South Asia and abroad of the advisories or social media updates and promoted through transformed into news articles, database entries, press Reports, articles, videos, information on news and initiatives atrocity violence and access to justice, the rights struggle of Dalit IDSN's communications and press work in 2015 have been cornerstone faced by victims of caste discrimination and collecting collecting the input from caste organisations in caste-affected countries, has been the cornerstone of IDSN's communications work in 2015. Key themes of IDSN's communications and press work in 2015 have been atrocities and access to justice, the rights struggle of Dalit women, forced and bonded labour and caste discrimination in the delivery of humanitarian assistance. Promoting Dalit rights initiatives and campaigns Reports, articles, videos, information on news and initiatives were sourced by IDSN from caste-affected countries and transformed into news articles, database entries, press advisories or social media updates and promoted through the website, social media, media contacts and newsletter. The many campaigns in South Asia and abroad of the Dalit women’s rights movement have been especially in focus. IDSN has published articles and spread awareness through all its digital communication channels using #dalitwomenfight, and done press work to alert media to the campaigns. Work to raise awareness of the rising crimes and atrocities against Dalits and IDSN members’ work to bring amendments to the Prevention of Atrocities Act in India, have received much exposure through IDSN’s channels. IDSN has also acted quickly to disseminate news of caste discrimination and atrocities against Dalits and IDSN members and when relevant also gave interviews in media such as VICE, Mashable, OZTV, and made appearances on Danish national television stations. The IDSN Op-Ed "Diluting India’s child labour law will trap families in cycle of poverty" was published by The Guardian in May 2015 and was shared via their website more than 800 times. The Guardian was also a top referrer of traffic to the IDSN website with more than 500 visits to the IDSN website in 2015 coming from articles in the Guardian. In connection with the UN Universal Periodic Review of Nepal IDSN issued the joint press release “UN Members deeply concerned about caste discrimination and untouchedbility” and distributed it widely. New IDSN website – a unique global resource A key resource for spreading awareness on caste discrimination is the IDSN website. The website has been comprehensively updated in 2015 and now offers fantastic new features including a searchable cross-referenced documentation database on caste discrimination, with more than 1800 entries and full integration of IDSN's social media channels. The entries can be filtered by theme, country, documentation type and year. The new website is also optimised for mobile devices to meet the needs of the many users accessing the site via smartphones and tablets. The website features enhanced security and stability, a greatly improved design and the possibility for integrating IDSN’s resource database into other sites. User engagement with the IDSN website is rising steadily and in 2015 there was a 17% increase in both visits and unique users of the website with over 35,000 unique users, 47,500 visits and over 90,000 page views. The users of the IDSN website are spread across the world with 40% of visits coming from caste-affected countries in South Asia and 60% from other countries topped by the United States, Denmark, United Kingdom, Canada, Netherlands, Australia and Germany. The website is a valuable tool for policy makers, researchers and activists. For example, IDSN web statistics show 160 different universities and research institutions worldwide accounting for more than 1000 visits. Many referrals to the IDSN website came from search engines, global news websites, international human rights organisations and key research institutions. The statistics also show a 200% rise in referrals from social media to the IDSN website compared to 2014.

Rising engagement with IDSN on social media Social media is an increasingly important part of IDSN’s communications work in public outreach but also internally between network members. Facebook continues to be a very popular communication channel with IDSN’s total number of Facebook fans on both our Facebook pages rising to over 12,000 in 2015. IDSN’s Twitter channel (@idsnupdates tweeted out more than 1200 tweets in 2015 and registered a 95% increase in Twitter followers compared to 2014. IDSN tweets are often retweeted and liked by followers. The IDSN Twitter channel is increasingly a key communication channel within the IDSN network, as more members join the service and share... views of ISDN’s online introductory videos on caste discrimination and on Dalit women, rose by over 75% compared to last year and to a total of more than 78,000 views. ISDN’s older intro video ‘I’m Dalit How Are You?’ also continues to gather views now at almost 192,000. ISDN also maintains an online video playlist library on YouTube.

News articles and the ISDN newsletter
ISDN published 36 news articles in 2015 and sent out monthly, or at times bi-monthly, newsletters including these articles and other information as well as relevant press clippings. The news articles published by ISDN were made on the basis of developments and activities in caste-affected countries, ISDN activities and new reports, events and information sourced from the network.

For example, ISDN made an article summing up an otherwise underreported UNICEF study on discrimination against the Muhammasheen (Ali Akhdam) in Yemen, this article was subsequently published by ReliefWeb and distributed widely. ISDN also summarised findings of key reports in news overviews such as on the NCDHR report on access to justice and collated information, reports and statistics on key issues into analysis pieces such as the ISDN article on rising caste violence in India.

The ISDN newsletter was redesigned in 2015 with enhanced social media integration and alignment with the new website. Subscribers to the ISDN newsletter increased by 10% from 2014 figures. It represents a wide range of policy makers, activists and researchers.

ISDN publications and programmatic work
ISDN communications and networking work in 2015 also included publishing briefing materials on thematic and country situations and producing a comprehensive report on the ISDN UN side-event on Caste and Gender-based forced and bonded labour. ISDN also published the statement ‘50 years of ICERD – from paper tigers to global action’ in connection with the 50th anniversary of the UN Slavery Convention and distributed this statement widely.

At the beginning of the year the production and distribution of the ISDN annual report was undertaken and a designed version of the new ISDN strategy 2015-2018 was also produced and disseminated.

India
Rampant caste discrimination continued to plague India in 2015, with violence against Dalits rising and the space for civil society shrinking. As documented in reports released in 2015 by Amnesty International, Human Rights Watch and the US State Department, as well as by human rights NGOs in India, equal access to justice, services, education and opportunity is still only a dream and the situation remains grave. Even in the delivery of disaster relief, caste discrimination prevailed. Positive developments in the struggle against caste discrimination include the adoption of the amendment to India’s key anti-caste legislation as well as the continued efforts of strong Dalit movements fighting for justice, equality and basic human rights.

Historic amendment of India’s caste legislation
In a victory for the Dalit movement in India, a historic act amending the Scheduled Castes and the Scheduled Tribes (Prevention of Atrocities – PoA Act) legislation was passed in parliament on 21 December, 2015. The National Coalition for Strengthening PoA Act (NCSPA), which includes several of ISDN’s members, has struggled for six years to ensure amendments to this act. The act strengthens the rights of the victims and witnesses, improves access to justice and introduces preventive measures. While Dalit organisations and networks are celebrating this milestone achievement, they are also aware that focused actions to ensure implementation of this act remain key precursors for the amendments to have the desired effect.

Caste-affected countries
ISDN’s members include a range of Dalit rights and human rights organisations in South Asia. While ISDN does not make financial grants to national level activities or member organisations, the following country chapters are based on submissions from members to ISDN both through regular interaction through the year and through the end of year member reports.

The country chapters on India, Nepal, Pakistan and Bangladesh offer brief analysis of the current situation as well as insight into a few of the key activities undertaken by ISDN and ISDN members at the national level. A few developments in relation to other caste affected countries, including Yemen, Mauritania and Japan are also included in a separate section.

Access to criminal justice and rising violence against Dalits
Earlier in the year, the 2015 Equity Watch report “Access to Justice for Dalits in India” was released on the failure of the administration of justice to protect Dalits in India. The report, released by the National Campaign on Dalit Human Rights (NCDHR), supported by Christian Aid and the European Union, finds that violence and atrocities against Dalits are rising in India and there is an urgent need to step up efforts to ensure justice for victims. According to National Crimes Statistics presented in the report there has been a 19.4% increase in crimes against Dalits from the previous year. The number of cases registered under the PoA Act has also risen every year since 2011, taking a leap in 2014 to 47,064 cases against 13,975 cases in 2013.

The report concluded that dominant castes in India are using violence against Dalits to reinforce the hierarchical caste related power structures and suppress Dalit rights assertions and claims. The violence and atrocities are often directly related to Dalit assertion of basic rights including land rights, freedom of expression, access to justice, access to education, water, food, decent work and other services and equal participation in cultural and religious activities.

The brutality of the crimes against Dalits is also reported to be getting worse. For example, in October 2015, the burning to death of two small Dalit children, akeep in their house in Faridabad, grabbed international headlines. The children were reportedly victims of a dispute between Dalits and members of the dominant caste. In this case and many others, ISDN members in India carried out fact finding missions and pushed for justice and ISDN have raised awareness through the international network.

Even seemingly minor signs of Dalit resistance in 2015 have resulted in brutal retaliation by the dominant castes such as a Dalit boy’s wrist being chopped off because he was wearing a watch; another was killed as he had a song on his mobile phone.

“India is witnessing an unprecedented rise in crimes against Dalits since 2014 … What is shocking is the barbaric nature of the crimes. Practices of untouchability and caste discrimination have changed in terms of their form and nature and these new tools of violence have been unleashed in such a way that the perpetrators feel that they have a newfound license to oppress.” PL Punia, Chairman of the National Commission for Scheduled Castes (NCSG)
2015 examples of rape and violence against Dalit women

- Dalit woman killed over land dispute in Haryana
- Dalit woman raped under the session on "Minorities in the UN Agenda".
- Dalit woman stripped, beaten, and paraded naked in UP village.
- Teenage Dalit girl raped, body found hanging from tree.
- Torture of Dalit woman who refused to withdraw case.
- Dalit severely beaten - her shadow falls on hijab-clad man.

"Lawlessness and impunity when it comes to Dalits generates a lack of faith in the justice system."

Manjula Pradeep, Director of Navsahr, speaking at the UN Forum on Minority Issues in 2015.

At the national level IDSN members in India have been comprehensively addressing the access to justice issue. The National Dalit Movement for Justice (NDMJ) - NCCHR, has been organising legal clinics and have continued to work through the 'Atrocity Tracking and Monitoring (ATM) System' tool that was launched in 2014. The movement also organised a National Tribunal on Caste Atrocities hearing cases from victims from all over India, on the occasion of Human Rights Day on 10 December 2015. They furthermore trained young Dalit human rights defenders in several states and offered capacity building workshops and seminars.

NCCHR member Navsahr Trust continued its work in 2015 on taking up the cause of Dalits and bringing them to justice as well as awareness raising in communities and in educational institutions. NCCHR members Navsahr, National Federation on Dalit Women, Jan Sahas and the women's movement of NCCHR, AIDMAM, as well as IDSN associate NACDOR, have throughout 2015 worked specifically on access to justice for Dalit women, who are especially marginalised due to intersectional discrimination on the grounds of both caste and gender. Dalit women often bear the brunt of violence, as they are used as a way to punish Dalit communities. Statistics cited in the 2015 Equity Watch report also show that according to official national crime statistics, rape cases registered against Dalit women have increased with over 47% since the previous decade.

Dalt women take the struggle for justice to the streets, abroad and online

National marches to stop violence and atrocities against Dalit women and bring perpetrators to justice were organised by both AIDMAM and Navsahr in 2015. In Gujarat, where Navsahr is based, a campaign was organised to end violence against women where more than 40,000 people participated. A documentary film is being made, documenting this march. Navsahr’s Executive Director, Manjula Pradeep, participated in the International Conference on Gender Equality held in Kerala and made a presentation on exclusion of caste in the UN agenda. Several references to caste were made in the outcome document from the conference.

Following on from the previous Dalit Women Self-Respect marches in Madhya Pradesh, Haryana, Uttar Pradesh, Bihar, and Maharashtra states in 2014, AIDMAM organised a march in Bundelkhand, Uttar Pradesh and a march joining together Dalit and Advadi women to fight for justice in the state of Odisha in 2015. Protestors found women being beaten, raped, stripped naked and paraded through their villages and a rape case as barbaric as the 2012 Nirbhaya case.

“In a recent chilling and inhuman crime, no headway has been made to apprehend perpetrators of the alleged rape and murder of a 15 year-old girl in Sargipally village of Bolangir district. The rape was as barbaric as the Nirbhaya case in New Delhi. But the police are silent and soft on perpetrators of caste-based violence.” Asha Kowtal, General Secretary of AIDMAM, speaking at the Dalit women’s self-respect march in Odisha.

Following the Odisha march The General Secretary of AIDMAM, Asha Kowtal, stated that she had witnessed violence against Dalit and Advadi women amidst willful negligence from the side of the police and judiciary.

In order to increase awareness of the violence and injustice faced by Dalit women in India AIDMAM organised marches in Germany and an extensive North American tour where Dalit women from India spoke at events and seminars and held protests across key American cities. In Germany Asha Kowtal also spoke at an Amnesty Germany event. The global events received significant media coverage in North America and it is hoped that the events will create lasting solidarity.

The movement also staged several very successful digital events and online campaigns under the banner of #Dalitwomenfight, which IDSN promoted on all its channels. The events included live streaming, hackathons, radio shows, flashmobs, a Facebook and Twitter campaign and an interactive online timeline charting Dalit history, curated by Dalits and driven by Dalit women to highlight Dalit History Month in April.

“A girl who was never considered to speak at any of the platforms in her hometown… speaks to the whole world on AL JAZEERA today.” tweeted Dalit woman human rights defender, Sanghapali Aruna Komarnna, after appearing on the Al Jazeera STREAM online and broadcast news show, talking about the Dalit history month project and Dalit resistance and one of the slogans of the campaign, “We are Dalit women. We are not flowers. We are flames of resistance!” was also shared on Twitter.

In April two Dalit women received prestigious awards for their work on defending the rights of Dalits in India. Manjula Pradeep, Navsahr Trust, received the Feminia Women 2015 Social Impact Award and Beena J. Palikal of NCCHR received the Dr. Ambedkar Award 2015 for her work.

Information on the situation of Dalit women in India featured prominently in IDSN communications work and across all IDSN input to the UN and the EU throughout 2015 and was specifically the focus of the IDSN input on Dalit women in relation to the 59th session of the UN Commission on the Status of Women. In addition to themes such as violence against Dalit women, lack of access to education and economic empowerment, the paper focused on Dalit women in modern slavery in India.

Combating forced and bonded labour in India

Caste and gender based forced and bonded labour were also the focus of the 2015 IDSN UN side-event at the 29th session of the UN human rights council. Manjula Pradeep presented on the situation in India explaining how Dalit women continue to be forced into prostitution under the caste-based Devadasi practice and into manual scavenging. The event included a keynote video address by the UN Special Rapporteur on contemporary forms of slavery, Ms. Urmila Bhoola, and allowed for a constructive dialogue as well as a sharing of information and recommendations between UN agencies, civil society and States.

“Men would shun me in and out of my room at night as if I had no right over my body, only they did. It broke me down completely.” 27-year-old Dalit woman, forced to serve as ‘a temple slave’ in South India portrayed in an IPS article.

Other speakers also gave examples of the intersection of caste and gender in construction industries, textile industry, and agricultural work in India. Meena Varma, of the Dalit Solidarity Network in the UK spoke about Dalit girls working in forced labour under the Sumangali scheme in India’s textile industry. The event was documented by IDSN in a comprehensive report.

Speaking at the event from the International Labour Organisation (ILO) in India was Coen Compier who highlighted the ILO’s work to document the Devadasi practice as well as its continued work to combat manual scavenging in India, with reference to the ILO Resource Handbook for ending manual scavenging. He also covered the extensive work of IDSN member in India, Jan Sahas, as Director Aishf Shiekh was unable to attend the event at the last minute.

Government data released in 2015 (from the 2011 census) found that 180,657 households were engaged in manual scavenging in India, with reference to the ILO Resource Practice as well as its continued work to combat manual scavenging in India, with reference to the ILO Resource Practice as well as its continued work to combat manual scavenging in India. Quarries and the report Soiled Seeds – Child Labour and Modern Slavery and Child Labour in India Granite presented and the ways forward.

Minorities were the majority of those engaged in child labour in India. The reports found that Dalits, low castes and Dalit children and child labour.

A report was published summing up the challenges and international Trade Unions, NGOs and businesses. Heard from grassroots activists, national campaigners and the development of manual scavenging – and empowerment of manual scavengers. Jan Sahas furthermore took part in important meetings with the Ministry of Social Justice and Empowerment – Central Monitoring and organized a State level consultation to share the experiences of people from the Manual Scavenging community in Bihar in June 2015.

There were numerous stories in 2015 of the death of manual scavengers, especially those who died from poisonous gases in manholes where they were submerged with no protective gear. Forced and bonded labour also continued to include great risks for those involved both due to the health hazards of the work but also if the workers tried to escape, with cases of limbs being chopped off or brutal violence.

A National Consultation on ending forced labour in the garment sector was organized by Rights Education and Development (READ) and the Dalit Solidarity Network-UK, and supported by NCCHR. The consultation took place in May, addressed the problem of forced labour in the textile mills in a local, national and international context – and heard from grassroots activists, national campaigners and international Trade Unions, NGOs and businesses. A report was published summing up the challenges presented and the ways forward.

Dalit children and child labour

Dalit children also continued to be especially at risk of child labour and child slavery in India. In 2015, the report 'Cotton’s Forgotten Children' was released by the Stop Child Labour Campaign and the India Committee on the Netherlands (ICN) finding that Dalit children were engaged in child labour in India’s cottonseed industry, are not in school and are subjected to hazardous work and harmful chemicals. ICN also released the report ‘Rock Bottom’ – Modern Slavery and Child Labour in India’s Granite Quarries and the report Soiled Seeds – Child Labour and Underpayment of Women in Vegetable Seed Production in India. The reports found that Dalits, low castes and minorities were the majority of those engaged in child labour in these industries also.

In May 2015 experts warned that the amendments being adopted to India’s child labour law, allowing children under 14 to work in ‘family industries’, will push even more Dalit children out of an education and into child labour. The term ‘family enterprises’ is widely interpreted and a common euphemism for industries such as carpet weaving, bidi-rolling, gem-polishing, lock-making and match-box-making.

In response to this IDSN and the India Committee on the Netherlands had an Op-ed published in the Guardian entitled ‘Diluting India’s child labour law will trap families in cycle of poverty’ and the Guardian also ran the Op Ed ‘India’s child labour reforms could make it a dangerous place to invest’ by the Director of IDSN associate Anti-Slavery International, Aidan McQuade. Both argued that opening up for child labour of any kind is going to make already weak implementation of child labour laws even weaker and underlined how caste discrimination makes Dalits very vulnerable to child labour as their educational opportunities are limited.

Discrimination in education

Discrimination against Dalits in the educational system remained a widespread problem in India. Alienation, social exclusion, and physical abuse transcended all levels of education, from primary education to university. Literacy and drop-out rates among Dalits are very high due to a number of social and physical factors. Legislation and measures that have been taken to combat this continued to be inadequately implemented.

The forms of structural discrimination and abuse that Dalit children faced in schools were often so stigmatising that they were forced to drop out of school. One of the main issues is the discriminatory practices conducted by teachers, which may include corporal punishment, denial of access to school water supplies, segregation in classrooms and Dalits being made to eat separately, or forced to clean school toilets. 2015 was abound with new examples of this.

In addition, Dalit children face discriminatory attitudes from fellow students and the community as a whole, in particular from dominant caste members who perceive education for Dalits as a threat to village hierarchies and power relations. Intolerance, prejudice and harassment towards Dalits was also prevalent in institutions of higher education where discrimination is practised by dominant caste students, teachers, and administrations. The caste bias manifested itself in the way teachers ignored Dalit students and unjustly failed them in exams, in social exclusion and physical abuse, and in the unwillingness of the university administration to assist Dalits and support them.

In response to this, the National Dalit Movement for Justice – NCCHR, initiated a Campaign towards Zero Discrimination in School Education Institutions in 2015. A National Public Hearing was organized on 19 May to visualise the torture children are subjected to due to their caste, ethnicity or religion. The goal was to push for a strong policy and law on zero discrimination and violence against children in educational institutions. A coalition was also formed to draft guidelines on the mechanisms required for enabling discrimination and violence free school education. Other IDSN members also continued to work on this issue.

Disaster relief and caste discrimination

Another area of work for NCCHR was drawing attention to caste discrimination in relief operations following natural disasters. In January 2015, National Dalit Watch – NCCHR, held a National Convention on Inclusive Disaster Risk Reduction in New Delhi. The convention was attended by experts from across the country who had been on the forefront of disaster responses. Their tales revealed a shocking and consistent pattern of discrimination and exclusion faced by vulnerable communities in disaster response, mitigation and risk reduction. Participants strategized on how to combat this type of discrimination through political advocacy for legislative amendments and through on the ground policy and practice.

In November 2015, devastating floods in Tamil Nadu saw this issue brought to the fore again. An assessment report of the situation in Cuddalore District, Tamil Nadu, following the devastating floods, found that Dalit households were not receiving relief from the Government, despite non-Dalits having received such relief. Statistics in the Cuddalore report reveal that 95% of the houses surveyed that were found damaged due to the flooding, were Dalit houses, while Dalits have not received any shelter relief from the Government. The report documenting discrimination, “No. Respite for Dalits in Disaster Response, Tamil Nadu”, was released by National Dalit Watch and Social Awareness Society for Youth – Tamil Nadu.

IDSN wrote a news article on the report and distributed... this to key humanitarian actors, the EU, UN and media contacts including Reuters. Reuters picked up on the story an released the article Scant aid for low-caste villagers hit by Tamil Nadu floods117, which was carried by media across the world. In December National Dalit Watch released the comprehensive report “State Level Assessment on Monitoring Responses towards Affected Dalit Communities in Tamil Nadu Floods 2015”118. The organization REACH also released a brief report on “Forced discrimination and betrayal of rights and dignity” finding that the clean-up after the flooding in Chennai was being forced upon Dalits of the Arundhatiar caste.

Inclusive budgets and diversion of allocations

2015 saw devastating cuts made to the Scheduled Castes and Scheduled Tribes sub-plans (SCSP & TSP). The budget cuts made to the SCSP & TSP amount to a 60% cut in allocations for Dalits and a 53% cut in allocations for Adivasis119, according to the NCDHR. The cuts were made despite several meetings held between NACSTL, a coalition working to further the rights of Dalits and Adivasis and secure the budget components set out for them, and the Ministry of Finance. The sub-plans are meant to ensure that Dalits and Adivasis who suffer discrimination limiting their access to general budget resources are secured allocations. Beyond budgets being cut, IDSN members reported that funds budgeted for Dalits and Adivasis by the state were often diverted to unrelated posts. The NACSTL coalition intensified work throughout 2015 to counter further budget cuts in 2016 and to demand the proper allocations of the SCSP & TSP budgets.

“Pursuing unashamedly and openly a pro-rich policy, the Modi Budget outlines a corporate vision of India that shamelessly eats into the budgetary allocations meant for the millions of its poorest and neediest citizens, the Dalits and Adivasis,”

Paul Divakar, General Secretary of NCDHR

Protests following the January cuts resulted in that Dalit leader Paul Divakar from NCDHR and 29 other activists were arrested following a peaceful gathering of over 500 students gathered in front of the Indian parliament. This type of clampdown on the voices of dissent has been widespread in India in 2015.

Shrinking space for civil society & censorship

IDSN members and associates report that space for civil society in India is shrinking with tight regulations of foreign contributions for organisations working on Dalit rights and the harassment of Dalit human rights activists. This includes false charges and torture. Some Dalit organisations have faced having their funding frozen, without just cause. Censorship of films dealing with the issue of caste discrimination and blocking of Dalit events have also been increasingly witnessed.

In November, a Dalit folk singer was arrested120 and kept in custody and charged with sedition solely on the grounds of singing songs with a message to close down state owned liquor stores. Amnesty International and Human Rights Watch called for global public support for his release. He was later granted bail.

A documentary on the caste system and eating habits was withdrawn from a film festival in New Delhi. According to the BBC121, the documentary “Caste on the Menu Card” was the only film among the 35 sent to India’s information and broadcasting ministry to be refused clearance. These incidents are just a few in a wave of oppression of voices of dissent by the Indian Government and can be seen as expressions of the growing political intolerance in the country. In response to what is seen as a widespread clampdown on the freedom of expression dozens of prominent Indian scholars, artists, writers and filmmakers have returned their National awards in protest122. As documented earlier in this chapter, police torture and harassment of Dalit human rights defenders are also seen as attempts to silence their resistance.

Nepal

The struggle to end caste discrimination in Nepal in 2015 was dominated by the 2015 Nepal earthquake and the relief efforts that followed, as well as by the long awaited adoption of a new constitution in Nepal. Following reports of discrimination in earthquake relief efforts in Nepal, IDSN issued an urgent appeal to stop caste discrimination in relief delivery and rehabilitation, that was sent to key humanitarian actors, the media and policy makers. IDSN raised awareness of Dalit demands in the lead up to the adoption of the constitution and monitored developments in Nepal as the political situation in the country worsened and a blockade, stopping essential fuel and food supplies from India to Nepal, became a humanitarian disaster.

In 2015, IDSN was joined by three new full members in Nepal: the Nepal National Dalit Social Welfare Organisation (NINDSWO), Jagaran Media Centre (JMC) and the Feminist Dalit Organisation (FEDO). IDSN’s members worked hard to raise awareness, within the Dalit and non-Dalit communities, of Nepal’s ‘Untractability Bill’, which is still far from being adequately implemented across the country. With the lack of implementation of key legislation combined with the ingrained discriminatory attitudes that continue to dominate Nepal, caste discrimination remained a major human rights issue in Nepal.

These issues were all raised at the United Nations Universal Periodic Review (UPR) of Nepal in November, to which IDSN and key Dalit NGOs in Nepal had submitted a report. IDSN members from Nepal also participated throughout the year in IDSN teams at UH events, including the IDSN side-event on caste and gender based forced and bonded labour at the 29th session of the Human Rights Council, the UPR Nepal Review and the Minority Forum. The vulnerable situation of Dalit women, suffering multiple discrimination in Nepal, also continued to be a key focal point of IDSN and members in Nepal.

Earthquake relief – urgent action

On the 25 April disaster struck Nepal in the form of giant earthquake destroying over 500,000 homes, causing over 8500 deaths and injuring more than 20,000 people. Infrastructure in Nepal was damaged, roads blocked and in the aftermath of the earthquake people suffered from lack of food, clean water, shelter and medical care. While all those affected struggled, Dalits were found to be particularly disadvantaged as reports came in that ingrained caste discrimination was leaving them out of relief efforts.

In May the ‘Waiting for Justice in Response – Caste discrimination in aid delivery following the 2015 Nepal Earthquake123 report was released by IDSN members in collaboration with the Asian Dalit Rights Forum (ADRF) and National Dalit Watch in India (IDSN). The report covered 37 villages, in the ten worst affected districts in Nepal. The report uncovered that sixty percent of Dalits interviewed felt there has been willful negligence due to caste prejudice and that they experienced discrimination in relief and rescue services when compared with members of the dominant castes. Sixty-five percent believed that authorities had willfully ignored bringing rescue and relief efforts to Dalit locations. The assessment team found discrimination in access to shelter, food aid, health and water and sanitation. Immediate needs for Dalit families were outlined in the report. On the basis of this report IDSN issued an urgent appeal to combat caste discrimination in Nepal earthquake relief efforts124 on the 3 June and distributed this widely to key humanitarian stakeholders, funders, policy-makers at the EU and the UN, other International human rights organisations and the media.

A European Parliament urgency resolution125 on the situation in Nepal after the earthquake was issued on the 11 June – highlighting caste discrimination. Amnesty International also raised concern over caste discrimination in relief work in Nepal in their report “Earthquake recovery must safeguard human rights”126, based on among other things meetings with IDSN member the Feminist Dalit Organisation in Nepal. National and global media reported on the issue of caste discrimination in earthquake relief efforts including Huffington Post127, LA Times128 and Mashable129, the latter of which interviewed IDSN on the issue. All of IDSN’s members in Nepal were heavily engaged in relief work, mapping and advocacy in relation to earthquake recovery efforts in Nepal. The setting up of an efficient and inclusive government mechanism for recovery and reconstruction efforts was not concluded in 2015, which seriously hampered delivery of relief to affected communities, including the most vulnerable groups such as Dalits.

New constitution and Nepal-India blockade

The after-effects of the earthquake have been devastating for Nepal, exacerbated by a politically unstable situation. In the midst of dealing with a humanitarian disaster the long pending Nepal Constitution was to be negotiated and adopted. IDSN members, alongside many other organisations in Nepal, put much effort into lobbying for the inclusion of measures to ensure Dalit rights and proportional representation to be included in the constitution document.

A scheduled and broadcasted protest rally on 4 August in Kathmandu, organized by the Joint Dalit Struggle Committee, ended in a violent altercation with the police. The Dalit activists were calling for Dalit rights to be secured in the new draft Constitution. During the rally, police were reported to have used excessive force against protesters and Durga Sob, President of the Feminist Dalit Organisation (FEDO) and a number of other Dalit activists. IDSN also helped raise awareness of the Dalit movement in Nepal’s (FEDO) and a number of other Dalit activists. IDSN also reported to have used excessive force against protesters in the new draft Constitution. During the rally, police were

The UN Universal Periodic Review (UPR) of Nepal in November. There were, however, other groups in Nepal that were not pleased with the final constitution, particularly Madhesi groups along the border with India who felt that their concerns had not been met. A protest at the border between Nepal and India turned into a full blown blockade, which many believe to be supported by India. The blockade, stopping fuel and other necessary imports from coming into the landlocked country from India, has exacerbated an already critical humanitarian situation in Nepal.

Caste discrimination in the face of disaster, the India-Nepal blockade and the lack of implementation of key anti-caste legislation were all issued that were also raised at the UN Universal Periodic Review (UPR) of Nepal in November.

Caste in Nepal discussed at the UN

The UN Universal Periodic Review (UPR) of Nepal took place on 5 November. The Dalit Civil Society Organizations’ Coalition for UPR Nepal and IDSN prepared and submitted a parallel report entitled “Human Rights Situation of the Dalit Community in Nepal”.

We acknowledge that the Government has taken strides over the past years to ensure Dalit rights through legislative measures. However, we are demanding a national action plan to eliminate caste discrimination and an effective coordinating mechanism to oversee its implementation. There is also a need for state led public campaigns and institutional reform, as we have noted with deep concern that the state is yet to fulfil its strong commitment for inclusive and non-discriminatory institutions.” Bhakta Bishwakarma, National President of Nepal National Dalit Social Welfare Organization (NNDSWO) commenting on the UN Nepal UPR review

A summary note with recommendations 13 was shared widely with UN member states, and the core content discussed with diplomatic missions.

Seventeen United Nations member states raised their concerns and recommendations on caste discrimination13 at the review, urging the Government, in particular, to ensure effective implementation of the Caste-based Discrimination and Untouchability Act of 2011. States also recommended engaging and addressing the needs of vulnerable communities, including Dalits, in earthquake relief and securing equal opportunities in education for the communities.

Representatives from Dalit NGOs in Nepal including IDSN members JMC and NNDSWO took part in the review and lobby meetings arranged by IDSN ahead of the review. IDSN, FEDO and NNDSWO prepared the press release ‘Nepal - UN Members deeply concerned about caste discrimination and untouchability’ and distributed this widely. The final UPR report included nine recommendations related to caste discrimination. The Government accepted the recommendations, but categorized them as ‘already implemented or in the process of implementation’. This raised widespread concern among the Dalit NGOs as it is widely known that currently the legislation is very far from implemented, and underlines the need for a national action plan. The lack of access to justice and implementation of legislation to protect Dalits in Nepal was also brought to the fore at the UN Minority Forum in late November.

Durga Sob, President of the Feminist Dalit Organisation (FEDO) spoke on the panel14 of the forum and explained to participants that there is a “lack of accountability for law enforcement when it comes to Dalits.” Sob reiterated the recommendations given at the UPR of Nepal, endorsing the national obligations regarding access to justice and a need to strengthen the criminal justice system of Nepal in favour of Dalits and Dalit women in particular, by ensuring Dalit equal representation in all justice sector institutions. In addition to the general situation for Dalits in relation to systems of justice in Nepal Ms. Sob also raised the specific vulnerability of Dalit women, a theme that has been a significant part of all IDSN members’ work in Nepal.

Access to justice

Lack of access to justice highlighted in key reports

In its 2015 Annual Report15, Amnesty International highlights, in line with IDSN and its members, that caste and other discrimination remained rife in Nepal and that, “victims were subject to exclusion and ill-treatment, and torture including rape and other sexual violence.” It was furthermore found that, “The Caste-based Discrimination and Untouchability Act of 2011, was applied in only a handful of criminal cases due to a lack of awareness about the Act and victims’ fears of reporting attacks. Rape laws continued to be inadequate and to reflect discriminatory attitudes towards women.”

Likewise, the Nepal country profile of the US State Department report16 states that, “despite passage of the Caste Discrimination and Untouchability Act in 2011, a rigid caste system continued to operate throughout the country in many areas of religious, professional, and daily life. Societal discrimination against lower castes, women, and persons with disabilities remained common, especially in rural areas…”

The Asian Legal Resource Centre & jagaran Media Center (JMC) report for the Nepal 2015 UPR furthermore states that, “Dalits’ limited access to justice has three main causes: widespread lack of awareness of anti-discrimination law, ingrained indifference in the authorities—who refuse to register police reports, investigate cases, or prosecute those who practice ‘untouchability’—and the fear in victims of making a report when they suffer caste-based violence and discrimination. But, it is a reality that the police officials ignore or force the dismissal of cases concerning caste discrimination. Some police officers are also involved in the practice and promotion of caste-based discrimination violations.”
Multiple discrimination against Dalit women

Highlighting the status of Dalit women in Nepal, the Feminist Dalit Organisation (FEDO), with ISDN input, prepared a report for the 59th session of the Commission on the Status of Women (CSW). The organizations also supported Dalit women participation in the session. The report reveals an appalling literacy rate for Dalit women at 34.8%; that 80% of Dalit women in Nepal live below the poverty line, and that access to higher education for Dalit women is 11.8% as compared to 54.5% of the total population of women in Nepal. Rape, violence, forced prostitution and violence following inter-caste marriages continued to be key issues faced by Dalit women in Nepal due to their marginalisation along both caste and gender lines. This also leaves them at high risk of labour exploitation including forced and bonded labour. Durga Sob from FEDO took part in the IDSN UN side-event on Caste and Gender-based forced and bonded labour.

In June 2015, speaking on the panel, where she outlined particular forms of forced and bonded labour that Dalit women were subjected to in Nepal. She explained that despite being outlawed, over 60,000 people are still engaged in Haula bonded labour in Nepal, most of them Dalits. The issue of caste-based prostitution in Nepal and domestic slavery of Dalit women was also raised. Dalit women also participated in lobbying for the inclusion of explicit mention of caste discrimination in the UN sustainable development goals, where a team of Dalit representatives from Nepal including from FEDO, NIDOSW and JMC took part in protests and meetings in New York and Washington DC as part of a programme arranged by the Asian Dalit Rights Forum (ADRF).

In 2015 Dalits in Pakistan continued to suffer severe discrimination including in education, access to the labour market, access to justice and other basic human rights. Key issues that ISDN and member the Pakistan Dalit Solidarity Network (PDSN) have addressed throughout the year are the particular vulnerability of Dalit children and women, forced and bonded labour, political participation and land rights.

This exclusion results in low enrolment rates of Dalit children and high drop out rates. The lack of education in turn results in Dalit children being extremely vulnerable to forced and bonded labour and other forms of exploitation. Furthermore the need for preventive action in relation to natural disaster such as drought, that has killed more than 100 Dalit children in the past years, were also addressed in the report. Forced conversions and abductions of Dalits was also a key focus of the report.

Forced conversion, rape and abduction

Throughout 2015 PDSN reported on dozens of forced conversions, rape, murder and sexual abuse of Dalit girls. In their work to combat the abuse of Dalit girls, PDSN activists were met with threats and harassment. In a much needed move, Prime Minister Nawaz Sharif said that as part of the National Action Plan against Terrorism, the Government will make forced marriage of young girls from minority communities a punishable offence. Mr. Sharif said, “This is religious persecution, which is unacceptable.”

Forced and Bonded labour of Dalits in Pakistan

Forced and bonded labour of Dalit men, women and children in Pakistan continued to be a massive problem in 2015 and a key focus area for the work of PDSN and ISDN. In June 2015 ISDN held a UN side-event on Caste-based forced and bonded labour with case examples from India, Nepal, Pakistan and Bangladesh and speakers from the UN as well as ISDN members. Zulfiquar Shah from the Pakistan Dalit Solidarity Network was scheduled to attend the event, but was unable to travel to Geneva, his statement was instead read out by the ISDN Executive Director.

Pakistan

In July 2015 ISDN and PDSN submitted an alternative report to the UN Committee on the Rights of the Child (CRC) review of Pakistan, to take place in May 2016. The report highlighted persistent discrimination of Dalit children in school, with teachers and non-Dalit students often excluding Dalits from equal participation and physically and verbally abusing Dalit children. The curriculum emphasis on Islam also serving to further alienate Dalit children.

In the statement Mr. Shah pointed out that while the Bonded Labour System (Abolition) Act in 1992 declared bonded labour outlawed, and provided fines and imprisonments for violators, there is weak or no implementation of the law. The National Policy and Plan of Action 2001, a time bound plan that also created a substantial fund for the release and rehabilitation of bonded labourers, was also not implemented. All dates set out in the plan expired without any concrete results achieved or outlined actions taken, the statement read. These failures continue despite Pakistan having EU’s GSP+ status, which requires Pakistan to bring bonded labour and caste discrimination to an end as the incentive scheme is binding to the effective implementation of 27 conventions including core Human Rights and Labour Conventions.

These failures continue despite Pakistan having EU’s GSP+ status, which requires Pakistan to bring bonded labour and caste discrimination to an end as the incentive scheme is binding to the effective implementation of 27 conventions including core Human Rights and Labour Conventions.

Despite failing on implementation of national legislation Mr. Shah also pointed out that the state has failed in bringing in any fundamental changes in the economy or landholding, or to bring in a comprehensive labour policy to protect labour from exploitation. There is a lack of understanding of the linkage between caste and bondage. He stated, and no serious attention is paid to these concerns by the international community. He also offered recommendations on ways to combat bonded labour in Pakistan at the event. His statement and recommendation were also reflected in the report from the event.

Job quotas and land rights

In order to create opportunities for Dalits to leave bonded labour and escape poverty PDSN worked in 2015 to lobby for land rights for Dalits and job quotas or reservations earmarked for Dalits and minorities in Pakistan. In follow up to a 19 June 2014 Supreme Court judgement, for the rights of minorities in Pakistan, various organizations including PDSN members had lobby meetings for the implementation of a 5 percent job quota for minorities. This included a push for the Government of Sindh province to take action to implement this quota, which would be of particular benefit to the Dalit communities. The Sindh Government also decided to recruit 2000 Hindu and Christian officers for the protection of temples and churches, after a Hindu temple in Sindh was attacked and burned earlier in the year.

PDSN member organisations were active in lobbying for residential land rights for Dalits in Pakistan and a protest for Residential Land Rights for Scheduled Caste community was held in the front of Punjab assembly. A PDSN member also facilitated that 47 Dalit student received Government scholarships.

Shrinking space for civil society but political participation of Dalits rises

While the space for civil society in Pakistan became ever more restricted in 2015, with Dalit human rights defenders receiving threats and experiencing many difficulties in carrying out their work, political participation at the local level was reported to be on the rise. Two Hindu minority politicians were elected into the state Senate in 2015 and a large number of Dalits won seats in local elections in districts of Sindh and Punjab. PDSN reports that this represents a drastic change in the current political scenario and history and that the inclusion of Dalits in local government could help resolve Dalit concerns at the district level and change ingrained perceptions.
Bangladesh

While important advances have been made in Bangladesh in terms of visibility of Dalit issues, much remains to be done. Dalits continue to live an extremely marginalised existence, with Dalit women particularly at a disadvantage.

IDSN’s work in 2015 on Dalit issues in Bangladesh focused on gaining global exposure to the problems faced by Dalits in Bangladesh, reporting on the rights of Dalit children to the United Nations, and expanding the IDSN network with new members in Bangladesh.

IDSN members in Bangladesh continued to lobby for the enactment of the Anti-Discrimination Act; Dalit women’s rights; equal access to education, health, housing and water and sanitation. Members also worked to take up cases of atrocities and other human rights violations against Dalits and fight for justice. Important new reports and briefing materials were also published this year.

International advocacy and networking

In August, IDSN and the Bangladesh Dalit and Excluded Rights Movement (BDERM) submitted the report “Dalit Children in Bangladesh”146 to the UN Committee on the Rights of the Child (CRC) examination of Bangladesh. The report examines the current situation of Dalit children in Bangladesh and provides information about the implementation gaps in the enforcement of the International Convention on the Rights of the Child, and makes recommendations for the Committee’s examination. The observations in the report were based on independent studies and reports, case documentation, and recommendations by other UN human rights bodies sourced from members and compiled by IDSN. The CRC Concluding observations subsequently raised concern over discrimination and violence against Dalit children in particular, and lack of access to education for them. In September, The IDSN Executive Director visited Bangladesh and participated in dialogue meetings with a wide range of Dalit rights organisations, UNDP, parliamentarians and other key stakeholders. Following the visit the Dalit rights organisations Network of Non-Mainstreamed Marginalised Communities (NNMC)147 joined IDSN as a member. The visit gave significant new input to IDSN on the situation in Bangladesh, raised awareness among key stakeholders and opened doors for new collaborative partnerships.

In November IDSN member, the Bangladesh Dalit and Excluded Rights Movement (BDERM) organised the 3rd regional meeting of the Asia Parliamentarians Forum on Dalit Concerns (APFDC), held in Dhaka. Nineteen parliamentarians from India, Nepal and Bangladesh participated in the meeting aimed at creating lasting policy change and collaboration in the region.

Throughout the year IDSN also facilitated global exposure to the plight of Dalits in Bangladesh, for example, in the article “A tragedy of dignity: life as one of Bangladesh’s ‘untouchables’”148 by global news outlet VICE, and through IDSN newsletters. IDSN also published and distributed an IDSN briefing note on Bangladesh149 and an overview150 of references to caste-based discrimination in Bangladesh in reviews and reports of UN human rights mechanisms. In thematic submissions to the UN and other actors IDSN also continued to bring up caste discrimination in Bangladesh and specifically the situation of Dalit women in Bangladesh.

Advocacy for Dalit rights at the national level

Some of the specific challenges highlighted by IDSN members in Bangladesh in 2015 include effective implementation of existing policies and laws, lack of awareness among the key policy makers and authorities, lack of disaggregated data, and lack of good governance practices at local government level, resulting in Dalits being deprived of the resources allocated to them.

IDSN members in Bangladesh, BDERM and NNMC, continued to lobby for the enactment of the anti-discrimination act. They highlighted the need for the implementation of legislation addressing caste discrimination specifically and held meetings with key officials. They also organised workshops and awareness raising events with the aim of ensuring that the law becomes a reality. International Dignity Day was held by several Dalit NGOs, including NNMC, where more than 800 Dalits participated and the Speaker of the National Parliament committed to pursuing the Anti-Discrimination Act.

Other demands advocated for in 2015 by members in Bangladesh included education quotas and separate budgets for Dalits. NNMC submitted a memorandum to the Ministry of Finance, together with other NGOs, to push for separate budget allocations for Dalit welfare. Meetings were also held with local administration on land rights of marginalised communities and employment opportunities. Promoting increased access to education for Dalits have also been central to the work of BDERM and NNMC in 2015. BDERM has given support to Dalit students in admission procedures and applications and have lobbied universities to take up Dalit issues as a part of their discourse and make policies on quotas for Dalit students. In 2015, six universities in Bangladesh introduced quotas for Dalit students. At the primary education level NNMC held a meeting with the Ministry of Education with regards to the situation of Dalit children and access to primary education and supported youth Dalit leaders advocacy campaigns on education. Seminars and workshops were held throughout the year including the IDSN National seminar on “Dalits’ Right to Health: Accessibility and Reality” in March, where representatives from national and international organisations working on health issues participated and gave commitments to consider health rights of Dalits in their future strategic plans. NNMC also held a round table event on “Empowerment of Dalit people: our responsibility” at the national level with participation of the National Human Rights Commission, policy makers, human rights activists and journalists. The organisations also engaged in signature campaigns, marches, and supported legal action to be taken in atrocities cases against Dalits. IDBDRM and NNMC have been very active in 2015 in taking up legal cases and creating awareness of violence and atrocities against Dalits and highlighting the specific threat of rape and violence against Dalit women due to the three-fold marginalization along both caste, religious and gender lines.

A Public Hearing153 on “Discrimination and Atrocities on Dalit and Excluded Communities in Bangladesh” was held by IDBDRM, and fact-finding missions were carried out in specific cases. At the local level IDBDRM district committees also worked to change policies and practice and increase awareness of the situation of Dalits and the discrimination they suffer. District committees furthermore helped to gather information and data for a BDERM needs assessment in 36 districts. The information was submitted to Government officials for the production of a Government development plan in relation to Dalits. Several atrocities cases were also taken up by the media including the killing of a Dalit youth154 from a sweepers colony.

Other caste-affected countries

While the bulk of IDSN’s work in 2015 has been focused on Dalits in South Asia, IDSN has also been engaged in awareness raising and advocacy in relation to discriminating information on caste discrimination in countries outside of South Asia, including Yemen, Mauritania and Japan.

In June 2015, IDSN released a briefing note155 on caste-based discrimination in Africa. Yemen and diaspora communities offering an overview of some of the key documentation available, including UN references to caste. The briefing note was shared through IDSN’s communications channels and directly with UN officials.

Yemen’s outcaste Muhamsheen, literally meaning ‘marginalised one’, previously referred to as ‘Al Akhdam’, continued to suffer in the war torn country. A ground-breaking UNICEF mapping, promoted by IDSN in 2015, revealed an enormous welfare gap between the Muhamsheen and the general population.

The mapping of 9,200 Muhamsheen households was carried out by UNICEF and the Socio-economic Fund (Sf) in Yemen and revealed drastic disparities in education, housing, child protection and water and sanitation between the Muhamsheen community and the general population.

IDSN released a news article161 on the survey findings and distributed this briefing note to the media. The IDSN news was also carried out by global humanitarian news site ReliefWeb. While it has been widely known that this community is particularly disadvantaged, this mapping is the first time statistical evidence is brought forward to support this knowledge, and the figures are alarming.

In May 2015, Minority Rights Group published the report 'Still Far From Freedom: The Struggle of Mauritania’s Haratine Women’ highlighting how the outcaste Haratine community continue to suffer severe discrimination and caste-based slavery. IDSN promoted this report through its communication channels and shared it with relevant officials.

In relation to caste discrimination in Japan several global news articles surfaced on this in 2015, that were also promoted through the IDSN newsletter and website.

Dalit Solidarity Networks

In the Netherlands, Germany, UK, Norway, Finland, Denmark and Belgium national Dalit Solidarity Networks worked to raise awareness of caste based discrimination with the Government, the general population and businesses.

The networks pushed for action from the Government and tried to build understanding of the issue with people in their countries through events and media work. Many of the networks also engaged in working with the corporate sector to push for measures to combat caste-based slavery and discrimination.

Calling for action on caste, modern slavery and business

The Dalit Solidarity Network in the UK and the Dalit Network Nederland members, India Committee on the Netherlands, were very engaged in raising the issue of caste in relation to labour, slavery and big business.

India Committee on the Netherlands (ICN) produced and disseminated reports on natural stone/stone quarries and two on the seeds sector in India – and various articles on the garment industry which show that Dalits, people of low caste and Adivasi are the main victims of child labour, modern forms of slavery and exploitation. All three reports and the articles led to parliamentary questions with promises and action on dialogue with the Indian government and pressure on companies. In the case of the cotton and vegetable seeds sector several multinational and Indian seed companies have come together with NGOs and unions in India to work on tackling child labour and increasing wages.

ICN were also part of the negotiating team of NGOs working with trade organizations in the garment sectors, unions and government on a so-called Covenant-binding agreement, so that in the sector, and were able to include the Dalits as specific group in the section on child labour and forced labour in the document.

The Dalit Network Netherlands also gave input to the UN Special Rapporteur on slavery, Urmila Bhoola, for her report on global supply chains. The information on modern forms of slavery – especially of Dalits – in the garment and natural stone industry formed part of the final report. The network also participated in a given written input in the two-day meeting organized by the OCHHR on a UN Guidance Tool on caste discrimination with a focus on specific supply chains.

In the UK the Dalit Solidarity Network UK continued its work as a member of the Ethical Trading Initiative (ETI). The Director of DSN-UK, Meena Varma, is an ETI Board member.

DSN-UK, as a member of the Tamil Nadu Multi Stakeholder group continued to provide its expertise on caste discrimination and called for improvements in the supply chains. DSN-UK is a lead NGO in the ETI Rajasthan Stone Group, which aims to build a sustainable model and framework that can help this sector address core labour rights issues. The Group has been working with various partners, including companies, NGOs, trade unions and local industry players, to better understand the labour conditions in Rajasthan’s export sandstone sector. The opening activities concentrate on Health and Safety, and also a good buy in from the local NGOs, including Centre for Dalit Rights and Gravis, both with a clear Dalit focus.

The DSN-UK Director also gave a presentation on caste discrimination in supply chains to the ETI in Norway giving recommendations to the Norwegian ETI company members: this had been facilitated through the Dalit Network in Norway who were also active in pushing for corporate sector awareness of this issue in Norway. Ten different companies, including some of Norway’s biggest garment and aluminium retailers attended the meeting. The retailers were shocked at the scale of the caste problem in India.

DSN-UK and Rights Education and Development (READ) partnered for a project funded by Textile Recycling for Aid and Development (TRAID), aimed at ending the Sumangali Scheme affecting Dalit girls. As part of the project, a National Consultation was organised by READ and supported by the NCDHR in May 2015.

"The interest on the loan is often so high - up to 48 percent per year - that workers can hardly pay off the loan. This debt bondage is directly linked to the fact that more than three-quarters of the workers are Dalits (outcastis) or from the lowest castes and extra vulnerable because of discrimination.”

“Almost half a million Indian children are working to produce the cottonseed that is the basis for our garments and all the other textile products that we use. Around 200,000 of them are below 14 years of age.”

“Most of the children working in cottonseed farms belong to poor Dalit (outcaste), Adivasi (tribal) or Backward Castes families.”

“Almost 156,000 Indian children are producing vegetable seeds (tomato, hot pepper, okra), of which 50,000 are below 14 years of age. The large majority of them are either Dalits, low caste or Adivasi (tribals). All of them are exposed to harsh working conditions, including poisonous pesticides and long working days. They mostly drop out of school between 11 and 13 years of age.”

Media advocacy and new publications

Media advocacy with the aim of sensitising the general population to the exclusion faced by the Dalit community were an important part of IDSN members’ work in Bangladesh. For example, NNMC launched a digital media campaign on issues faced by Dalits and tribals in Bangladesh, produced a television commercial in connection with this and facilitated that a rural Dalit woman was brought in to speak on Dalit women’s issues on a national TV talk-show. NNMC furthermore trained young Dalit leaders in media advocacy.

Several important new reports and briefing notes were published by IDBDRM in 2015. Full-length reports on the right to education182 and water and sanitation182 were published as part of an Equity Watch series on Dalits. Eight thematic briefing notes were also published by IDBDRM and subsequently made available on the IDSN website and distributed through the IDSN newsletter and digital platforms. NNMC conducted research on Dalit Communities Living in Railway Colonies and railway lands in the North of Bangladesh in 2015, to be published in early 2016.
the problem of forced labour in the textile mills from a local, national and international context – and heard from grassroots activists, national campaigners and international Trade Unions, NGOs and business. Meena Varma also spoke at the IDSN side event on caste and gender based forced and bonded labour at the UN Human Rights Council.

Lobbying for Government concern over caste discrimination and more NGO action

The DSN-NK-Humanity Chair and long term supporter, Jeremy Corbyn MP, was elected the leader of the UK’s Labour party in September. While this means that he is no longer able to lead the All-Party Parliamentary Group for Dalits (APPG), he will continue to pursue Dalit rights in his new position.

In March, The DSN-UK Director spoke at the Liberal Democrat’s conference side event, organised by the Humanist Secular Lib Dems. The Party’s Equalities Motion, and the policy paper that it endorsed at the Autumn Conference, both included a commitment to tackle caste discrimination.

Following this, in April, the Liberal Democrats launched their BAME (Black Asian and Minority Ethnic) manifesto, which also included a pledge to outlaw caste-based discrimination. The manifesto seeks to tackle racial discrimination and boost equal opportunities for Britain’s BAME communities. Unfortunately, LibDem support in the Parliament has been greatly reduced post the General Election.

The DSN-UK alongside other DSN networks in the UK continued to push for the activation of the anti-caste discrimination clause in the UK Equality Act. An amendment introduced in 2013 making caste an aspect of race, is not yet implemented. To raise awareness of caste discrimination in the UK, the DSN-UK Director also gave several interviews - including to the BBC Asian Network and the Economist.

The Dalit Solidarity Network in Norway actively pursued bringing caste discrimination to the attention of state officials and the Government of Norway. The network provided written and oral input to the Parliament’s Standing Committee on Foreign Affairs and Defence’s hearing on the new white paper on human rights. The issue was also raised on several occasions with Parliamentarians.

The DSN-Norway addressed the Minister of Foreign Affairs, Børge Brende, in a letter about the importance of involving Dalits in the relief work and in the ongoing reconstruction work in Nepal, after the earthquakes in April and May and gave input to the Norwegian government before the UPR hearing of Nepal. In the UPR, Norway asked a question about the Government’s plans to improve inclusion of marginalized groups, such as Dalits, in the education system.

In the UK, the DSN-UK also engaged in advocacy with UK based NGOs. Through coordination between Christian Aid, DSN-UK, VODI and BOND - a network of UK based NGOs working in international development, seeking to foster greater collaboration on issues such as training, advocacy and fundraising, a meeting was organised for BOND members to form a Working Group on Caste Discrimination and Dalits.

In Germany the Dalit solidarity network DSD held discussions with decision makers and donor agencies in relation to caste-based discrimination during relief following the devastating Tamil Nadu floods in South India in November 2015, sharing the report by NCDHR and SASY on caste discrimination in relief efforts.

Awareness raising, exhibitions and events

All the Dalit solidarity networks engaged in raising public awareness of the issue of caste discrimination in 2015. The DSN in Finland had a stand on caste-based discrimination and the situation of the Dalits at the World Village Festival. The stand featured a photo exhibition of Jacob Carlson’s photos of Dalits in South Asia. The festival had almost 80,000 visitors.

In the UK the “Caste out of the Shadows”166 conference was organised by Christian Aid. DSN-UK, Karuna Trust, Village Services Trust and Anti Slavery International with the School of Oriental and African Studies (SOAS) and the School of South Asian Studies in September, 2015. The conference explored the persistence of caste-based discrimination and exclusion, in relation to gender and human rights, and addressed the role of NGOs in the eradication of caste-based discrimination. In connection with this an interdisciplinary seminar on how caste identities shape the mind called “Minds of Caste”167 was held by University College London (UCL). The Executive Director of DSN also attended the conference and seminar.

During the weeks prior to the visit of the Indian Prime Minister to India, UK alongside the Awaaz Network and the South Asia Solidarity Group sent an open letter to Mr Modi, and organised protests, articles and briefings to the press and media. As a result several press pieces highlighted the growing unrest of the Modi regime and Channel 4 ran an excellent piece168 featuring DSN members. The DSN-UK director also spoke at a Human Rights Watch event at the Royal Institute in October on Caste discrimination in education in India.

In Germany, the DSD network together with Amnesty International organised the German tour on “Violence against Dalits – exploring Gender and Caste intersections” as part of their “Experiences from India” featuring Aasha Kowtal, the General Secretary of AIDMAM – The Dalit women’s movement of NCDHR. The tour held events and seminars in Kiel, Hamburg, Berlin, Bremen and Münster. The facts shared with German students and other people were frightening and shocking for most of the audience. At the same time the discussions with the Indian guests provided a lot of solidarity among the listeners. Together with German and Indian students and volunteers DSD also had a stall at the German Evangelical Church Assembly. Many visitors participated in a quiz on Dalits, for which you had to study the DSN flyer. A special highlight was the dance performance on “Beauty and shame: Dalit girls, women and sexualised violence”.

The DSN-UK also engaged in advocacy with UK based NGOs. Through coordination between Christian Aid, DSN-UK, VODI and BOND - a network of UK based NGOs working in international development, seeking to foster greater collaboration on issues such as training, advocacy and fundraising, a meeting was organised for BOND members to form a Working Group on Caste Discrimination and Dalits.

In Germany the Dalit solidarity network DSD held discussions with decision makers and donor agencies in relation to caste-based discrimination during relief following the devastating Tamil Nadu floods in South India in November 2015, sharing the report by NCDHR and SASY on caste discrimination in relief efforts.

Awareness raising, exhibitions and events

All the Dalit solidarity networks engaged in raising public awareness of the issue of caste discrimination in 2015. The DSN in Finland had a stand on caste-based discrimination and the situation of the Dalits at the World Village Festival. The stand featured a photo exhibition of Jacob Carlson’s photos of Dalits in South Asia. The festival had almost 80,000 visitors.

In the UK the “Caste out of the Shadows”166 conference was organised by Christian Aid. DSN-UK, Karuna Trust, Village Services Trust and Anti Slavery International with the School of Oriental and African Studies (SOAS) and the School of South Asian Studies in September, 2015. The conference explored the persistence of caste-based discrimination and exclusion, in relation to gender and human rights, and addressed the role of NGOs in the eradication of caste-based discrimination. In connection with this an interdisciplinary seminar on how caste identities shape the mind called “Minds of Caste”167 was held by University College London (UCL). The Executive Director of DSN also attended the conference and seminar.

The DSN Network Netherlands continued to be very active on their website Dalits.nl where over 30 articles were published, some adapted from IDSN. The website had more than 80,000 visits. The Dali issue also figured frequently in the Dutch and English newsletter from the India Committee on the Netherlands.

In Belgium, DSI also distributed information on caste discrimination in French through their digital channels, including a special issue of their newsletter on Dalit icon and author of the Indian Constitution, Dr. Ambedkar. Dr. Ambedkar is still unknown to many Europeans, there is hardly any information about his life and his work available to the French speaking Belgian audience. Articles have also been added to the website www.dalit.be169.

During the month of May, the Belgian version of the IDSN exhibition “260 million reasons to act” was presented at the city hall of Woluwe-Saint-Lambert (Brussels), in close cooperation with the local mayor and his administration. As a follow up to the exhibition, the mayor has invited Solidarite Dalits Belgique to the South Festival of Woluwe-Saint-Lambert, where solidarity groups had access to a large audience to present their action. Several hundred people visited the exhibition, and about one hundred people from different areas of Brussels participated at the opening ceremony and the conference. DSI also continued its educational activities in secondary schools, featuring the exhibition as well as other educational materials.

In Denmark, work on sensitizing the Danish media resulted in several interviews in Danish National Television and one of Denmark’s largest newspapers Politiken wrote an article on the situation in Nepal featuring Dalit rights activist, Bhakta Bishwakarma, of IDSN member organization NNDWOC.
Organisation and finances

Membership

With the adoption of revised statutes and the IDSN strategy 2015-2018\(^{196}\), in December 2014, effectuation of the postponed due to resource constraints. The network was re-structured with new categories of affiliation, i.e. affiliates of Non-Mainstreamed Marginalized Communities (NNMC), new members joined IDSN. The new members are: Nepal Feminist Dalit Organisation, Nepal, India; Women and Non-Government Organisations in the Philippines; National associates from caste-affected countries were initiated in the beginning of the year. In 2015, IDSN with gratitude received funding from the EU officials about efficiency of our work and an excellent strong membership base, testimonials from top UN and international human rights organisations. Despite being a well-recognised organisation with a gender policy and a guiding note on additional criteria on membership.

Governance

With the adoption of new statutes in December 2014, the Council decided on a new governance structure with a General Meeting (GM) for members held every three years and a Board in replacement of the Executive Group (EG). Currently, IDSN governance is in between the two structures. The funding constraints affected the timing of the first GM of IDSN originally planned to take place in 2015; which is now scheduled for March 2016 and to be held in conjunction with the 31st session on the UN Human Rights Council. At this GM, the Board will be elected, thus completing the transition to the new governance structure. The frequency of EC meetings was higher than usual due to the funding challenge: EG members met in Geneva in March; Brussels in June and Geneva in November in connection with IDSN advocacy interventions. In addition, several SKYPE meetings were conducted.

A revised version of the IDSN Policy and Guidelines on Participation in IDSN organised events was adopted on 7 March by the EG, which also started work on an IDSN gender policy and a guiding note on additional criteria on membership.

In 2015, the Executive Group composed of the following members:

- Meena Varma, Dalit Solidarity Network, UK – Co-convenor
- Manjula Pradeep, Navsarjan Trust, India – Co-convenor
- Paul Divakar, National Campaign on Dalit Human Rights, India
- Durga Sob, Feminist Dalit Organisation, Nepal
- Chandini, Dalit Solidarity Network, Nepal
- Henri Tiplagane, People’s Watch, India
- Rikke Nöhrlind, IDSN, Ex-officio member

Secretariat

There were several changes in staffing during the year. In March, Maia Ingvarsdottir, Program and Finance Manager, ended her long-term assignment with IDSN. Maia had been with IDSN since its inception in 2001 and worked with much dedication and a high commitment for the Dalit cause.

Marie Gertz Schlundt, IDSN UN Programme Officer, left the organization in August. She was replaced by Nina Back Andersen, in the position of International Advocacy Officer.

The position as Programme Officer - Finance and Administration, was partly covered with interim arrangements, and in late December, IDSN contracted Karen Bundgaard Andersen for the job in a part time position.

IDSN Executive Director, Rikke Nöhrlind, Head of Communications, Maria Brink Schleimann and part time book-keeper, Peter Søby Pedersen, remained in their positions.

The Executive Director travelled extensively during the year, including to New York and Washington to seek remedies against the blocked IDSN ECOSOC Application, and Bangladesh. In addition, travels to Geneva, Brussels and London were undertaken for advocacy interventions, most of which involved IDSN members or partners from South Asia.

ECOSOC Application

The now 8-year deferral of IDSN’s application for ECOSOC accreditation continues due to repeated questions in the NGO Committee. During this period, IDSN has received 69 written questions, posed by one member of the Committee, namely India, resulting in continuous deferral of the application by the Committee. IDSN’s application is now the longest pending with the Committee. As pointed out by the UN Special Rapporteur on freedom of assembly and association in the General Assembly in October 2014, the continued questioning of IDSN and deferral are “clearly unacceptable, wrong and unfair”. Several states have also expressed their concern and at the June meeting, the Chair of the Committee encouraged members to reach a conclusion on the application.

IDSN Executive Director participated in the Regular Session (January) and the Special Session of the NGO Committee (May) and had meetings with several states on the continued blocking of the application. On 23 March, a joint letter\(^{197}\) on the case was presented to US Secretary of State, John Kerry, signed by 14 international organisations. On several occasions, IDSN was invited to speak on the case at launches of the International Service on Human Rights (ISHR) Handbook on the NGO committee in Geneva and New York, at events hosted by the Government of Australia.

ECOSOC case

IDSN’s ECOSOC Status – the longest pending NGO application

The International Solidarity Network (IDSN) has since 2007 sought to be accredited as an NGO with the United Nations in order to be better able to monitor and influence the work in the UN on caste discrimination. The application has been deferred at all following sessions of the Committee on NGOs, for over eight years. During this period IDSN has received 69 written questions posed by one state, India, to which IDSN has always provided full, transparent and timely responses. During the process, no objections have been made to IDSN’s application on technical or procedural grounds.

The UN Special Rapporteur on the exercise of the rights to freedom of peaceful assembly and of association in the context of the situation of human rights organisations, a position often occupied by one state, India, to which IDSN has always provided full, transparent and timely responses. During the process, no objections have been made to IDSN’s application on technical or procedural grounds.

“The case of the International Dalit Solidarity Network, an international NGO focusing on caste-based discrimination and other forms of discrimination based on work and descent, is particularly troubling: since 2008, the Network has received 64 written questions from the Committee, all raised by India. It is now the longest pending application before the Committee.” (2014)

Norway has also addressed the case specifically in the UN General Assembly in 2014 stating that, “The continued deferral for seven years of the International Dalit Solidarity Network’s application for accreditation as an NGO with the UN, ... is in our view unacceptable and the situation should be rectified.”

For IDSN’s work, it remains a considerable challenge that the application for ECOSOC accreditation has not yet been granted to ensure its free and effective association with the UN. Consultative status would provide for easy and direct access to various UN bodies, including the human rights mechanisms. In 2015 IDSN continued its battle for UN ECOSOC status.

was founded in March 2000 to advocate for Dalit human rights and to raise awareness of Dalit issues nationally and internationally. IDSN is a network of international human rights groups, development agencies, national Dalit solidarity networks from Europe, and organisations in caste-affected countries. IDSN engages with the United Nations, the European Union and other multilateral institutions, working for action-oriented approaches to address ‘untouchability’ and other human rights abuses against Dalits and similar communities that suffer discrimination based on work and descent. IDSN bases its work on contributions from members, associates and affiliates. The network produces crucial input in the form of documentation, strategic interventions and lobby action and also supports national level lobbying.
