

STATE-SPONSORED HOMOPHOBIA IN AFRICA WORSENS HIV/AIDS EPIDEMIC

$2

Canadian perspectives on global justice

Nov 2009 Vol. 23 No. 1

Publications Mail Agreement 41141008

The Upstream Journal

EXCLUSION

THE DALITS OF BANGLADESH
DOMESTIC WORKERS IN HONG KONG
LAND EVICTIONS IN CAMBODIA
GARIFUNA PEOPLE OF HONDURAS

Dalit people are “untouchable” by birth, subject to segregation, restrictions on livelihood and access to services, land grabbing, destruction of their houses, intimidation, violence and sometimes rape and murder.

In this issue:

Exclusion

Dalits in Bangladesh

A the bottom of society, fighting for a voice

5

Honduras beaches

Local Garifuna organization claims tourism development means increased repression

9

Homosexuality and Africa - a deadly combination

State-sponsored oppression and the impact on the HIV/AIDS epidemic

11

Financial vultures

Poor countries pay millions to private collectors on old, often forgotten, debts

16

Second class in Hong Kong

Domestic workers come for the work, risking exploitation, and are permanently excluded from citizenship

20

Landgrabs in Cambodia

Evictions of poor communities is common as demand for land rises

22

Eye on the World Bank and IMF

*In the corridors, the Upstream's editor checks out the winds of policy change
Book review: "Moving Out of Poverty"*

25

Eye on Ottawa

Canada's new law on accountability in foreign aid, and why it's not working

30

Ernie Schibli's Opinion

Canada's reluctance to condemn the Honduras coup

33

The cover, and all other photos for the Dalit story, are by Ryan Higgett, the author.

Our thanks to intern Erina Morgan for her work on the design and layout of this issue, to our volunteer and intern writers, and to the photographers who contributed their work.

The Upstream Journal is printed on 100% recycled paper with a high post-consumer content.

Dear readers,

I demanded a lot of patience from the author of the story on the Dalit people, Ryan Higgett, after he approached us wanting to write about what he was seeing in the slums of Bangladesh. His writing was good, he responded quickly to suggested changes, had some terrific photos - and had to wait months for us to publish it. He wanted it included in an Upstream as soon as possible, I wanted to wait and feature it as a cover story.

Now at last it is here, in your hands, along with a really good group of stories from our volunteer writers.

No one gets paid for their articles in the magazine. We don't pay the photographers either, yet somehow we are privileged to be able to include some dynamic professional images.

The Upstream has got to be one of the lowest-cost magazines there is. We've shopped around and work with a print shop that gives great service at an unbeatable price, and the postage is Canada Post publications mail, which is much lower than first class letter mail. I get a salary I'll describe as modest, for which I also am also the Executive Director of the Social Justice Committee.

But the main reason we survive, and get better as a magazine, is because of the volunteer power that fuels all of the SJC work. And I think you'll agree that they have come through again in this issue.

Together, the volunteer writers and I work through what stories will be written, and how they'll be approached. They do the background research, and then interview the most relevant people they can. Using Skype, long-distance cards, or email - any free or cheap way they can, they speak with individuals around the world to put together fair, balanced and credible stories that you generally won't find elsewhere.

Even though the Upstream is low cost, it isn't free. Our next step is to see if we should pursue advertisers. What do you think? Below, you'll see some examples of the kinds of ads we'd pursue (we gave these ads away for free).

Derek MacCuish 1-514-933-6797 editor@upstreamjournal.org

Vision du Tibet

Artisnats du Tibet, Népal et Inde
Handicrafts, Clothing, Incense, CDs and Jewellery
1616 Ste-Catherine ouest (Le Faubourg) 2nd floor
Phone: 514 989 8396

Choose Fair Trade for your holiday shopping this year!

At our three Montreal stores you will socially responsible gifts ranging from hand-crafted jewellery and personal accessories to home décor, skin care products and food.

5674 Monkland Ave, Montreal – 514-483-6569
4128 St. Denis, Montreal – 514-848-0376
290 Bord du Lac, Pointe Claire – 514-428-0450

Fair Trade Since 1946

The term "Dalit" is a Sanskrit word that means "those who have been broken and ground down deliberately by those above them in the social hierarchy." Dalits live at risk of discrimination, dehumanization, violence, and enslavement through human trafficking every day. Dalits constitute the largest number of people categorized as victims of modern-day slavery. - Dalit Freedom Network

The Dalits of Bangladesh

The lowest of the Hindu castes, these "untouchables" fight for a voice

BY RYAN HIGGETT

The Pongue Sweeper Colony, a dense network of one-room shanty houses built from scavenged bamboo, wood, and corrugated metal, sits on what is essentially an oversized ditch between the Dhaka Orthopedic Hospital and the World Bank in Dhaka, Bangladesh. The ground in the slum is wet and stagnant, the homes built on bamboo poles two or three feet off the ground. Often, more than one family lives in a single house, without electricity or sanitation.

They share latrines dug into the earth and get their drinking water from a small pipe that winds its way through the reeking debris.

Most of the one hundred and ten families there are "sweepers" - cleaners of the city's roads and sewer systems. They are Dalits, the lowest of the Hindu castes, for centuries "untouchable."

N. Sree Ramu, the twenty-eight year old Joint Secretary of the Bangladesh Dalits Human Rights (BDHR) organization, lives here with his wife and three year old daughter. While showing me around he told me that his family and most of the others in the colony have been there since the government of Bangladesh plowed over their old shanty houses and relocated them from another part of the city in 1993 – their fourth relocation since 1979.

The government had again given an eviction notice to all the families of the colony, but Ramu said that they have nowhere else to go and each family has been paying two taka (about three Canadian cents) everyday to local police so they can stay.

They have few options, and by birth are subject to numerous forms of discrimination – segregation, restrictions on livelihood and access to services, land grabbing, destruction of their houses, intimidation, violence and sometimes rape and murder. Local musclemen sell drugs around the main entrance to the colony and collect “tolls” from colony members for access to their own homes.

A LIFE OF HUMILIATION

Talking in a group at BDHR’s office, Ramu’s friend James described when he was made to buy a teapot he was using in a teashop when the owner realized that he was Dalit. James had tainted the pot by touching it, and the owner said that he “could no longer, in good conscience, allow his other patrons to use it.”

“I didn’t know what would happen to me if I refused to pay for the teapot,” James said. “I submitted and bought the pot because I was aware of the kinds of things, violent things, often done to Dalit people like me.”

The discrimination faced by Dalits in Bangladesh was described in a recent study by the Indian Institute of Dalit Studies in association with the International Dalit Solidarity Network (IDSN).

“Since they are considered unclean, Dalits live segregated from other groups in their own neighborhoods. This includes regular denial of access to Muslim public spaces, including temples, restaurants and shops, and the risking of sanctions, often vicious, if they handle ordinary domestic items used by non-Dalits in these spaces.”

More than 60 per cent of Dalits are deprived of education, trapping them in poverty.

“When Dalits do find their way into Bangladesh’s education system, they often face discriminatory behaviour from school administrators and other students.”

Walking with Ramu through the rain-sodden Pongue Sweeper Colony, it was evident that an immediate and pressing problem that the Dalits face is finding shelter. Social, economic and religious pressures combine with shortcomings in law enforcement to push urban Dalits like Ramu and his family to the sides of railroads or into the reeking, garbage-filled public housing “colonies” set up by the government. The cramped living conditions and lack of hygiene in slums like the Pongue Sweeper Colony make disease rampant among the Dalit.

“Inability to afford medical treatment means that many Dalits in Bangladesh die from malnutrition, diarrhea, typhoid, cholera, tuberculosis, and pneumonia,” Ramu said.

THE MOVEMENT TO EMANCIPATE BANGLADESH’S DALITS

There have been various campaigns for reform to the caste-system, especially in India, but Dalit activism has only started to gain any significant momentum in Bangladesh in recent years.

B.G. Murthy, the late Bangladesh Dalit activist, attended the Global

“Our children are not getting government and other jobs, even if they are highly educated. So we demand that the government allocate quotas in educational institutions and government jobs for our children. We are the citizens of this country but we are deprived in all stages. We want the deprivation to go. We want to live like all other citizens.”

- Babulal Sardar, Bangladesh Dalit and Excluded Rights Movement

Dalit Conference in New Delhi in 2001 and was inspired by the growing force of India's Dalit movement. He returned to Bangladesh and, with the help of other local human rights advocates, established BDHR, an organization and a movement that fights untouchability, casteism and economic exploitation, supports the development of Dalit communities, and pushes for reform of national laws.

"In addition to our new monthly newspaper, we have held several conferences and meetings with interested civil society organizations featuring Dalit people," James said. "These have helped put a human face on caste-based discrimination in this country."

The BDHR has also connected with other human rights movements internationally, including the IDSN, the South Asia Dalit Rights Forum, the Dalit South Asian Association for Regional Cooperation Assembly, and the World Dignity Forum. The primary objective of these alliances is to bring caste-based discrimination into the consciousness of the world's political leaders and reestablish the Dalit people's lost humanity. The IDSN in particular works to ensure global recognition of Dalit rights, which they see as overlooked by the UN and other international and intergovernmental institutions like the European Union.

Dalits in Bangladesh are neglected by mainstream international development initiatives, reflecting the lack of awareness of the Dalit situation beyond South Asia, the lack of power of the Dalits politically, and a Bangladeshi elite at best indifferent to the Dalit plight.

Bangladesh's formal Poverty Reduction Strategy, adopted in 2005 as part of the country's obligations to the World Bank and IMF, makes no reference to Dalits (despite the fact that the Pongue Sweeper Colony itself is just meters away from the Bangladesh office of the World Bank). It does acknowledge that caste-based discrimination exists in the country, but official development programs don't have specific measures to support Dalits and place their dignity and inclusion on par with the rest of society.

THE WAY FORWARD

Without political pressure from outside, the government remains apathetic to implementing legislative provisions to protect the poor and disadvantaged. Even so, the movement to end discrimination against Dalits is gaining momentum.

In Dhaka an increasing number of Dalit youth are being admitted to public schools, and major newspapers, including the Daily Star, occasionally print stories about Dalits.

The IDSN is calling for the repeal of Bangladesh's Vested Property Act of 1974, which Professor Abul Barakat of Dhaka University said gave the state the right to confiscate land from 925,050 Hindu households. The land ended up in the hands of 0.4% of the population, mostly powerful politicians among the ruling Muslims.

In collaboration with Nagorik Uddyog - "The Citizen's Initiative" - BDHR is now working to build its capacity to support the Dalit people and protect their rights. In April 2008, the two organizations held a consultation meeting with over 25 other groups representing Dalit interests, and established the Bangladesh Dalit and Excluded-Peoples Rights Movement (BDERM), a national platform intended to raise awareness, transform policy and end discrimination against Dalits.

The future of the people living in the Pongue Sweeper Colony is uncertain, but Ramu hopes to save enough money to send his daughter to school when she is of age. "My hope is that one day she will be able to break free of the cycle of discrimination and poverty that for so long has trapped the people of my community."

Ryan Higgitt holds a MA in sociology from Concordia University, Montréal. He is leading a research project at Nagorik Uddyog on the treatment of gender issues in Bangladesh's PRSP. He can be contacted at nu@bdmail.net.

All the photos were taken by Ryan Higgitt at the Pongue Sweeper Colony.

For more information on Dalits and caste-based discrimination, visit www.idsn.org, www.nuhr.org and www.dalitstudies.org.in.

Please consider supporting the Social Justice Committee as a "sustaining donor."

Making automated monthly donations spreads out the cost for you, provides us a reliable income, and helps us plan more effectively. (And it's tax deductible!)

It's easy.

- Do-it-yourself. Click on the "donate" button on our web site, www.sjc-cjs.org.

or

- We can set it up with you, using your credit card. Just give us a call at 514-933-6797

Keep the Upstream Journal coming - right to your mailbox

Your subscription, for only $5, gets you "Canadian perspectives on global justice" delivered to you five times a year.

Add on a tax-deductible donation to the Social Justice Committee, and you support the Upstream Journal and all our other education and advocacy programs.

It's easy. Use Visa, Mastercard or cheque, by phone, mail or on-line.

514-933-6797

www.upstreamjournal.org